ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 2, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 16th December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 14th December; and from Calcutta to the 13th December.

THE first meeting at Calcutta of the Viceregal Legislative Council will be held on January 6th, by which time the new members may be expected to have arrived in Calcutta. The session is not likely to be a heavy one in any way.

LADY DUFFERIN arrived in Allahabad on Saturday, December 10, and left again for Calcutta on the morning of the 14th, accompanied by the Ladies Helen, Hermione, and Victoria Blackwood, Mrs. Rowan Hamilton, and Major Cooper, A.D.C.

LORD DUFFERIN, continuing his tour, arrived at Allahabad on Tuesday, December 13th. He left for Benares on the 15th, to open the new bridge over the Ganges.

LORD REAY, who, with Lady Reay, has left Bombay for a tour in Guzerat, arrived at Ahmedabad on December 14th, where he was presented with an address by the Municipality. Replying to the address, his Excellency promised to do all he could to induce Government to increase the loans for further improvements and to provide further educational facilities. He also recognised the great importance of the Rutlam Godhra Rullway project, and promised his full support and assistance.

THE Maharajah of Idar, who was to be invested with the K.C.S.I. by his Excellency the Governor, also arrived at Ahmedabad.

THE South Deccan Railway over the Braganza Ghat to the Portuguese frontier has been completed, and through communication by the West Deccan line from Poona to Belgaum.

Defalcations amounting to Rs. 75,000 have been discovered in the accounts of the Karachi branch of the Bank of Bombay. Mr. James Grant, the manager, has been suspended, and proceedings will be taken against him. He is now, however, seriously ill.

THERE has been another revolt in Nepaul, this time on the part of the followers of Ranbir Jung. It is said that the army has declared for Ranbir.

General Dumshere Jung, Commander-in-Chief of the Nepal forces, is at present in Calcutta on a visit.

It is reported that there has been fighting in Khanabad, in Turkistau, between the inhabitants and the servants of the Ameer. Four of the latter are said to have been killed.

ISKANDER KHAN, who was said to have been appointed Governor of Penjdeh, is safe at Teheran.

THE Madras Times has been informed "on good authority" that Ayub Khan will, in all probability, be located in Bangalore. "The original intention was to send him to the Punjab; but the authorities have, we understand, wisely decreed that Bangalore would be a more out-of-theway place."

The proposals submitted some time ago for revising the Secretariat staff in Burma have received the sanction of the India Office. The staff will now consist of a Chief Secretary, a Secretary, two Under-Secretaries, one Assistant Secretary, and a Director of Land Records and Agriculture.

A SERIOUS fire has occurred at the Framjee Petit Mills, at Mazagon. The reeling and bundling room was destroyed, and damage to the extent of Rs. 3,50,000 done.

THE cost of the extension of the Bhownuggur-Gondal line to Porebunder will be borne in equal share by the two States of Gondal and Porebunder.

THE National Congress, which is to be held at Madras at the end of this month, will be presided over by Mr-Budroodin Tyabji, of Bombay.

THE Narayen Cotton Mills, Bombay, have been sold by auction for Rs. 1,12,000.

THE Maharaja of Mysore has started on tour through Northern India. He will make a prolonged stay in Bombay.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN has arrived at Quetta. Duringhis absence on furlough Beloochistan has been converted into a first-class Agency, and Sir Robert, who has been formany years associated with Khelat and Quetta, is the firstpermanent Resident under the new order of things.

A NEW Municipal Bill for Calcutta is meeting with much opposition. The proposals which seems to have aroused most opposition is that to increase the number of Commissioners.

THE I.M. s.s. Clive left Bombay on Dec. 15th for Rangoon with thirty-three Native officers and 1,200 rank-and-file for the Burma police.

THERE has been much rejoicing in Kattywar on the occasion of the home-coming of the Thakore Sahebs of Limri and Morvi.

Two Pathans, who had been arrested at Aden for complicity in the murder of a woman whose mutilated remains were found in a box in a ditch at Parel, have been brought to Bombay. One of them has made a full confession.

A EUROPEAN guard on the North-Western Railway is incustody on the charge of outraging a lady passenger.

Dr. Hilson, Civil Surgeon of Agra, becomes Deputy Surgeon-General, Jhansi Circle, on Dr. Hutchinson's retirement.

A SERIOUS collision has occurred near Jhansi between two trains employed in construction work. Five persons were killed and eleven badly hurt. An inquiry is being made.

Intelligence has reached India that Mian Gul, alias Hafiz Abdul Hannan, the senior and elder son of the late Akhund of Swat, died of cholera on the 2nd September last.

A REPORT from a trustworthy source has been received' of the death of Sirdar Baluch Khan, chief of the Khetrantribe, who died suddenly at Barkhan on the 8th of last month.

AYUB KHAN, even when in extremities in the deserts of Eastern Persia, seems to have put a high value upon his own importance in the eyes of the British Government. He, of course, knew that his capture or surrender was a matter of moment to that Government owing to their alliance with the Amir of Kabul, and he tried to play his cards accordingly. A Teheran correspondent states that Ayub's first proposals made to General MacLean, through Sirdar Hashim Khan, were not only that a safe-conduct should be given to him, but that his allowance should be increased from £12,000 to £30,000 per annum!

THE Pioneer says that whatever else may be the issue of the Leitner revival the people of the Punjab need not be afraid of his ever coming back. Dr. Leitner, as everybody knows, was given a pension of Rs. 5,000 per annum by the Government of India as the price of his retirement— a dear price in one sense, but cheap in another. Since his arrival in England he has worked upon the India Office to such an extent that the Secretary of State was induced to promise him besides a bonus of £1,500, and the question now before the Government of India is whether this addition is called for. Of his reinstatement there is no question whatever.

A VARIETY of rulings on income tax liability, as it affects the army and its officers, have been recently confirmed, and in some cases are of general interest. The gratuity For the Burma campaign is free of the tax, and all troops serving in Burma have been exempted from payment during the coming financial year. A capital sum paid to an officer in commutation of a pension, whole or part, is not liable; nor are the command and staff allowances of volunteer officers, they being officers of Her Majesty's forces within the meaning of the Army Act. Detention Allowances are classed with travelling allowances, and are therefore exempted.

ONE of the twin daughters of Sir Charles Aitchison has Abeen attacked in Calcutta by typhoid fever of a severe character.

THE death is announced on the evening of the 8th December, at Umballa, of Lieutenant A. J. Richardson, of the Carabiniers, from enteric fever.

NOTES.

THE news to-day from India continues to be unventful. The land is at rest, for even the Madras Congress of Delegates, which was represented in certain quarters as likely to be of very great political significance, turns out to be a very humdrum sort of affair after all. Whether the Mahomedans be fairly represented at it or mot matters little, for the business to be discussed is not at all of an alarming nature. There can be no harm in the temperate discussion of questions affecting local selfgovernment, education, municipal and imperial taxation, or even in the passing of resolutions declaring that Natives of India should be elected to represent India in the British Parliament. There will be a good deal of talk no doubt, but talk with the Natives of India is often a harmless way of getting rid of superfluous "political"

Bur on the question of sending Natives to represent India in the British Parliament there is a difference of opinion amongst the Delegates themselves and their friends. The Statesman and Friend of India, which is generally a thorough supporter of all Native objects and aspirations, argues that it is in India in the local Legislative Councils that the Congress should claim represenstation where the representation would be real and not a sham, as a pretended representation in the English Parliament might be.

AND it gives this reason for its argument:-

We have been slow to express our belief that the attempt to secure a representation of India in Parliament, by getting two or three or half-a-dozen Native gentlemen elected thereto by English constituencies, is likely to prove not only disappointing but mischievous. It is from a delusive "representation" of this order in Parliament that Ireland has suffered so deeply. In spite of the hundred members whom her constituencies send to the House, her representation therein was purely nominal until Mr. Parnell'very astutely made their presence felt, by his policy of "obstruction," which has so greatly embittered a large section of the House against the Irish party. Men of broader views are beginning to ask what policy was embittered a large section of the House against the Irish party. Men of broader views are beginning to ask what policy was left to that party, when their votes on purely Irish affairs were systematically disregarded or swamped by the numerical strength of the English members. Should India be successful in getting half-a-dozen Native gentlemen returned to the House, their influence we reasonably fear would be nil. Let them be as well-informed and as eloquent as they may, they would be hopelessly out-debated in an Assembly like the House of Commons where no Ministry ever suffers itself to be defeated upon any important act of its administration. All that can healthfully be done in Parliament in behalf of India is, we believe, to be accomplished by a more skilful and neris, we believe, to be accomplished by a more skilful and persistent use of "the right of interpellation" which its members possess, and we would strongly recommend the Congress to consider this suggestion carefully.

How far local self-government has yet been a success in India may be gathered from the complaints which are to be found not in official reports only, but in the columns of the Press, of the shortcomings of the various Municipalities in which the elective system has had full play. Here is what one paper says of the Calcutta Municipality:—
"The Native majority have unhappily made self-government a by-word in India. After allowing Calcutta to be lifted by European energy and forethought out of the insanitary condition in which it existed for years, they have of late taken to opposing every reform urged on them by a European minority under the curious impression that such reform is designed to discredit Babu rule. The result of the conflict thus artificially roused is that, after a period of comparative immunity from cholera and zymotic disease, Calcutta has lately shown a decided retrograde movement in some of the haunts of endemic disease, and in the most favourable places is barely stationary. The Government has found it necessary to reserve certain controlling powers in the Municipal law, and will have to exercise them in an unsparing and determined way.'

Considering that Calcutta is the largest Indian commercial centre, and sends out shipping to ports all over the world, it is evident that some steps should be taken to arrest the neglect shown by the Native "ropresentatives" to all sanitary rules and precautions. It is all very well for a Native-loving paper to say, as one organ of the kind does:—"Here, in India, we think it nothing that pestilences come and go, leaving a track of dead, whilst the survivors lay no blame at the door of doctors, Government, or aliens. If God kills they are content to say He kills. Use, no doubt, has something to do with this calm acquiescence in the apparently inevitable." No doubt it has, but the European who holds that cleanliness is next to godliness will not so easily accept his Kismet in that way. He will insist on sanitation, and in doing so he really consults the interests of the helpless Native population as well as his own. "And," says a Bengal journal, "it is this consideration, namely, the real interest of the voiceless many, in whose name professional agitators often pretend to speak, that links on the attempt of self-government in Calcutta with its melancholy failure to the larger chain of provincial and Imperial reforms, which are advocated on all sides with equal boldness, and with no better prospect of success."

Local self-government (says another journal) must be a failure even in theory as long as it is not thoroughly representative, but the beginning of the rolling away of that reproach is announced in one of the Native papers, which states that a man who was formerly a common coolie has been nominated as a Municipal Commissioner for the Seebpore Ward, to be voted on at the next election of the Municipality of Howrah.

THE Lahore paper has received a telegram from "Gopal Chanda Chatterji, Finance Minister, Faridcote," stating that his Highness the Raja of Faridkots has no connection with the Nanak Panth Parkash Sabha, which exhibited the photograph of Dhuleep Singh. We can only say (the paper remarks) that we had been informed by more than one Sikh gentleman, well acquainted with the affairs of the Sikh community, that the Nanak Panth Parkash Sabha was almost, if not quite, entirely supported by the Rajah; and even the Native papers, which have argued that the Raja was not to blume, have described him as the patron of the Sabha. So, too, to the best of our recollection, was he described during the proceedings on the day in question. Possibly the telegram only means that the Raja has now no connection with the Sabha; and, if so, no further proof would be required of his innocence in the incident of the photograph. As we have before stated, only the severance of his connection with the Sabha was required to prove this.

THE Civil and Military Gazette advertises that a new volume will shortly be issued from its press, entitled "How to meet Russia." Upon which one of its contemporaries remarks, "We believe that the way to obtain and conduct the meeting referred to has already been pretty fully discussed during the last ten years; and the result is generally well known. Had the author intimated in the title that his work contained a 'tip' as to when the meeting will be likely to come off, there would then have been something in it to attract the attention of the public.

CLAIMANTS against Theebaw, numbering some four hundred persons, says "Claimant" in the Mandalay Herald, are grumbling that their claims have not been satisfied either one way or other by the British Government, who have taken in hand to adjust them. Claims were registered in December, 1885, after the occupation of the country, and although they have been investigated for some time past by Mr. Rice, the Special Commissioner appointed for this work, as well as by the Commissioner of the Northern Division, no intimation has yet been given by the British Government as to when Theebaw's debts will be paid.

It would appear that suttee is not altogether abolished of the following, taken from the Allahabad Morning Post, Bundelkhund stands in need of a deal of civilising. It is probably the most backward of all the States and provinces, and customs prevail in it of which we happily hear nothing in other parts of the country. At Gowrihar, quite recently, a Kachi woman performed the rite of self-immolation on the funeral pyre of her husband, in the presence of a large gathering of Natives. It is the first cass of suttee which has come to notice for a long period, and it is to be hoped that our Political Agent in Bundelkhund will institute a searching inquiry into the facts, and that the Government will sanction the severe punishment of the principal actors in the tragedy. The Agent, by the way, has been investigating a great murder case, the accused being an influential Thakore of Bundelkhund. He was convicted on very clear evidence, and the sentence of death passed upon him has just been carried out at Nowgong.

"An Occasional Traveller" writes to a Madras paper, calling attention to the disproportion of passenger rates in the P. and O. Company, as shown, for instance, in the charge from Brindisi to Bombay of £63 first-class, and £32 second-class, whilst those from London to Madras or Culcutta, about double the distance, are only £68 and £37 respectively by the P. and O., or £50 and £30 by other lines. This traveller would prefer travelling by one of "the other lines." He need hardly communicate this information, as he is at liberty, of course, to choose his own steamer, and if he finds another line which offers greater, or the same, advantages than the P. and O. in celerity, comfort, and all the et ceteras, at less money, he would be foolish not to divert his patronage to it. But a letter to a newspaper does not prove conclusively that he can secure these advantages so cheaply. His complaint regarding the disproportion of passenger rates between Brindisi and Bombay and between London and Madras is much more to the point, and this contention it may be worth the while of the P. and O. Company to explain.

Another correspondent, writing to the same paper, formulates a further charge against the P. and O. Company, to the effect that it does not provide proper accommodation for invalid passengers from India. Separate cabins, with extra attendance and good cookery, ought to be available, says the writer. So they are, if the invalids choose to pay extra for such advantages; but, as a rule, they do not. It is all very well to say that "the P. and O. spends large sums for advertising their business, but what more telling advertising their business, but what more telling advertisement could they put forth than the announcement that special accommodation for the sick will henceforth be provided?" It is a question of expense. If the invalid requires the advantages specified he must be prepared to pay for them. It is absurd to expect the P. and O., or, in fact, any steamship company plying between England and India, to give invalids separate cabing attendance and cookery at the invalids separate cabins, attendance, and cookery at the same rates charged to ordinary passengers. To do so might earn the gratitude of the invalids, and the praise of Pressmen, but the company would earn nothing elsecertainly not dividends for their shareholders.

ALL who knew him will well believe that the news of the death of Mr. F. J. Fergusson, Official Trustee of Bengal, was received throughout India with widespread sorrow. From personal experience we can fully endorse the genial tribute paid to his memory by a Calcutta con-temporary, that he had an inexhaustible kindness of heart, e genial, gracious manner, and that the end of a busy life found him without a single enemy.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 1.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 1.

An interesting illustration of the power of Western culture to penetrate the almost invincible social conservatism of India has lately occurred in Bombay. The brilliant career of the now famous English "girl graduate" has been repeated in India, in exceptionally difficult circumstances, by a Parsee girl named Sorabji. Miss Sorabji has distinguished herself throughout her University course, and has succeeded in winning scholarships each year. In 1885 she was declared Havelock prizeman and gained the Hughling scholarship, besides being at the head of the list of competitors in English. She has now succeeded in graduating in the first class. Only six students in all, of whom the remaining five were men, succeeded in obtaining this degree. Miss Sorabji is the only "girl graduate" in the Bombay Presidency.

The Allahabad newspaper strongly supports General Dickens's proposal for connecting Burma with India by a line of railway communication connecting Calcutta with Bhamo. This would involve the making of 224 miles from Chadpore to Cachar. Thence the railway would be carried through Manipore to the Kubu and Chindwin Valleys and thence eastwards on to Bhamo. The total distance from Calcutta to Bhamo would be 698 miles. Of this, 83 miles are already worked in the Bengel central system. The whole distance Manipore to the Kubu and Chindwin Valleys and thence eastwards on to Bhamo. The total distance from Calcutta to Bhamo would be 698 miles. Of this, 83 miles are already worked in the Bengal central system. The whole distance by this route from Calcutta to Mandalay would be under 800 miles, or less than the distance from Calcutta to Agra.

A preliminary meeting of the Native Congress was held at Madras last Wednesday, when a president was elected, and a resolution was passed reaffirming the necessity for the expansion and reform of the Legislative Councils. At the sitting of Thursday resolutions were passed suggesting a separation of the Executive and judicial functions without delay, the opening of the military service to the Natives, and the raising of the taxable minimum for income-tax to Rs. 1,000. One of the speakers on venturing to condemn the tone of a certain section of the vernacular Press is reported to have been greeted with loud cries of dissent. The Pioneer, alluding to this incident, points out that one of the so-called Bengal National newspapers has recently reproduced a singularly offensive caricature of Her Majesty from a London afternoon journal, while with the same issue it gives away, in the form of a supplement, a large portrait of Mr. W. O'Brien, M.P.

the form of a supplement, a large portrait of Mr. W. O'Brien, M.P.

"To mock at the Queen and glorify Irish sedition-mongers is scarcely calculated to make an English Executive oversolicitous to revolutionise the British administration in India, in order to gratify the ardent military aspirations of the advanced school of Bengalee political reformers. The tone of the vernacular Press must be very much changed for the better before further political concessions become possible. It is bad enough to have to tolerate written sedition, but with this lesson being borne in upon the Government every day, no Viceroy with a less actively-developed instinct for fomenting the disruption of the Empire than Lord Ripon had would be sufficiently insensate to sanction a policy which might have the effect of converting sooner or later theory into practice, and would at all events render a strong Executive in future a would at all events render a strong Executive in future a hopeless impossibility."

The Congress was dissolved on Friday. It will meet next year at Allahabad.

THE INDIAN WIMBLEDON TEAM. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

Is it possible that the idea of sending a team to Wimbledon next year has been given up? No monthly competitions have been announced in Lahore yet, and the opinion is consequently steadily gaining ground that the great difficulties encountered hitherto have damped the ardour of those who set this good scheme in motion. There is no denying the fact that the Indian Volunteer has fallen short of what was expected from him in this respect. Nobody thought an Indian marksman would bring away the coveted "blue ribbon" of the meeting, but at the same time there were not a few who hoped that the would bring away the coveted "blue ribbon" of the meeting, but at the same time there were not a few who hoped that the team would do better than it did. Be that as it may, the fact cannot be recalled, but it affords valuable lessons for the future. But is there to be a future? Is a team to be sent to Wimbledon every year? These are questions for the earnest consideration of every volunteer in Inda. Last season the funds were so low that only five men could go. These, with about an equal number of Volunteers on leave in England at the time, represented this great dependency of the Queen-Empress. This was very much like a "scratch" team, and it was little wonder, then, that they made such a sorry show. If there is to be a fund there must necessarily be subscribers to it. Once get over the money difficulty, and there will be no dearth of men who will make every effort to attain the required standard of excellence in order to get to England, not only to retrieve the honour of the Indian Volunteer Army, but to see London and its sights when an opportunity offers.

THE GARRISON IN BURMA. (Pioneer.)

The question of the strength of the garrison must be considered from the point of view of Upper and Lower Burma considered as one united Province. Before the annexation of Thebaw's dominions a large force had to be maintained in Lower Burma to guard against danger from the north; but Lower Burma to guard against danger from the north; but now the whole country is in our hands, and the lower province no longer needs this special protection. It can well spare half its troops for service beyond the old border, for places such as Thayetmyo and Toungoo have lost their importance in the recent rapid march of events. Rangoon should not, of course, lose a man of its garrison, as it is the point whence reinforcements can be sent by railway to Prome on the one hand and to Toungoo on the other; but given an efficient police force, equipped in semi-military fashion, there seems no reason where the policy to the policy of the policy and the policy for the wants of Lower seminal told should not suffice for the wants of Lower equipped in semi-military rashion, there seems no reason why 2,500 troops all told should not suffice for the wants of Lower Burma. The strength of the permanent garrison in Upper Burma cannot be settled at once. Time must show how many regular soldiers are required to hold the chief strategical posts, such as Mandalay, Myingyan, Meiktila, Menbo, and Bhamo; but as the process of disarmament of the population goes on the internal peace of the country will become more assured, and frontier troubles alone will give cause and more assured, and frontier troubles alone will give cause for anxiety. We have luckily escaped these so far, in spite of gloomy predictions about Chinese hostility, and there seems no good reason why we should become embroiled with our neighbours. Taking by no means a too sanguine view we may calculate that in 1890 not more than 10,000 troops will be needed to keep the pcace in Burma from Rangoon to Bhamo, and to repel attack from outside. As the resources of the and to repel attack from outside. As the resources of the country are developed it will be found that the military expenditure will be repaid a hundredfold, and that our latest "conquest" is one of the most valuable that has ever been made since we obtained a footing in India.

HIC JACET JUBILEE. (Times of Ceylon.)

For a moment we must assist at the funeral obsequies of the Jubilee. The report of the Executive Committee having been laid before the Council, as a Sessional Paper, it behoves us to say a few words before we lay the remains of the Jubilee at rest for ever. Looking back upon events from this distance of time it must be confessed that, although demonstrations of loyalty in this colony were not very concentrated, yet they were hearty and spontaneous. There is probably no portion of Her Majesty's dominions other than those inhabited by a people of English blood where loyalty to the Throne is so conpeople of English blood where loyalty to the Throne is so conspicuous and so sincere as it is in this colony. Though in our population of near three million souls many races and creeds are included, of disloyalty or disaffection we know nothing. It was only to be expected, therefore, that the occasion of Hcr Majesty's Jubilee would be celebrated with enthusiasm throughout the island. The people of Ceylon are, however, poor, and even in the capital the funds subscribed—Rs. 32,347—did not allow of any gorgeous display such as the wealth of the inhabitants of the Presidency cities permitted in Bombay, Madras, and Calcutta. But the loyalty of the people of Ceylon was no less conspicuous than in the wealthiest city of the empire, as all who took part in, or were spectators of, the jubilee rejoicings here can testify. There still appear to be many who think that a more suitable object could have been selected as the permanent memorial of Her Majesty's reign than a Hospital for Incurables, but there cannot be two questions that no more worthy object could be hit upon, and we feel sure that the Queen, whose sympathy with suffering is proverbial, will be pleased to know that such an object has been selected by the inhabitants of his colony. spicuous and so sincere as it is in this colony. Though in our

THE GRIEVANCES OF TELEGRAPH OFFICERS.

"Hope Deferred" writes to the Times of India:

Sir,—The unfortunate officers of the Telegraph Department are once more doomed to disappointment. It is already clearly seen that the recently introduced reorganisation and retirement schemes are likely to prove a failure.

The retirement scheme is based on existing rules with an additional pension of Rs. 1,000 to officers under fifty years of age, decreasing to Rs. 500 up to the fifty-third year, and then ceasing. The more favourable pension rules conceded in 1885 to officers appointed in England are still withheld from those appointed in India. Consequently, those under twenty-five years' service, of whom there are several among the superintendents cannot get their half-pay to start with, and that, even with the extra pension offered, would get less now than they would under the ordinary rules by waiting a few years longer. Had it not been for this fatal omission, I know as a longer. Had it not been for this fatal omission, I know as a positive fact that several of these officers would have been willing to retire. As it is the scheme will, in their cases at least, be inoperative. It looks very much as if it had been deliberately and intentionally made so.

As regards retirement of the men of the "blocked years" (1868 to 1871), it is scarcely to be expected that many of them, to please the Government and their juniors, will effect the happy despatch. As they are mostly of middle age, retirement to them really means cutting short their career when there is but the remotest chance of obtaining other employment, while still having, humanly speaking, many years' work in them. I therefore, conclude that there will be few, if any, retirements. So much for this part of the so-called "remedial measures."

I now pass the reorganisation of classes, grades and salaries. This is far from being liberal. It takes with one hand almost as much as it gives with the other. Thus, while personal allowances are somewhat increased, officiating promotions from grade to grade are abolished, the maximum pay for second grade superintendents is reduced from Rs. 1,050 to Rs. 1,000, and permanent promotions, instead of being made as heretofore and permanent promotions, instead of being made as heretofore whenever vacancies occurred, are only to be made twice yearly. In short, the whole scheme is only a specious and delusive attempt to make a half-measure do duty for a real reform—to shelve the difficulty by an appearance of concession, announced with much official special pleading, and which, containing little substantial advantage, will not bear close examination.

Could anything be weaker or more absurd than argument of Resolution No. 135 T E that the solution of the problem is left in the hands of the officers themselves:—"If a sufficient number avail themselves of the privileges offered, the condition of those that remain will be all that can be reasonably expected." It amounts to this:—If A and B retire, C and D will benefit, not otherwise. This is scarcely leaving much in the hands of the sufficient number of retirements take place to cause a flow of promotion, which I have shown are not to be expected, the scheme stands self-condemned on internal evidence of its own importance.

evidence of its own importance.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS AND LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

(Indian Spectator.)

We do not see that local self-government stands in need of the support of the National Congress. The principle has been repeatedly affirmed, and has been very largely carried out. Schemes of self-government have been tried, and, as a rule, found to succeed. There is no necessity, therefore, for regarding local self-government, as a thing of the future, to be obtained by political agitators. Indeed, agitation may lead the Government to think that the extension of local self-government ought not to be granted without a fresh consideration of first principles, a thorough examination of the arguments of the agitators. As regards the poverty of the people, we do not see what Resolution can be passed. Who is propage, we do not see what resolution can be passed. Who is prepared to compress into a single Resolution or half-a-dozen Resolutions the remedies for the poverty of the masses in different parts of India? Mr. Banerjea writes in his letter:—

"The introduction of representative institutions and the wider employment of indigenous agency in the Public Service of the country would indeed on few to reliate the conditions." wider employment of indigenous agency in the Public Service of the country would indeed go far to palliate the condition of the people." Assume this to be true. But if Representative Institutions and the employment of Indigenous Agency are provided for by distinct Resolutions and established on the strongest grounds, it is not only unnecessary but impolitic, by a fresh Resolution, to bring these necessary reforms into close connection with the material condition of the masses. As a matter of fact, poverty of the people, in our humble judgment, stands in no definite relation either to representative institutions or to the employment of educated Natives in high offices. The "separation of judicial from Executive functions" had better be taken up by Local or Provincial Congresses, previously to its being brought up before the National Congress. The Volunteer movement is a subject with which we are anxious to couple the increased employwith which we are anxious to couple the increased employment and the promotion of Natives of India in the Army. The functions of volunteers are limited; and the enrolment of any number of volunteers will not dispense with the paid Army in India. Why should not Natives of India be employed Army in India. Why should not Natives of India be employed in that Army as largely as possible, and be promoted to all the offices they deserve? The Native Army has always done admirable service to the Government; it is the Native Army that is now practically conquering Burma. Why should not that Army be developed, instead of taking in expensive English recruits? If the bulwarks of a country are her people, it is necessary that a large portion of the people should receive military training. "Police" is a subject which does not appear to us suitable for discussion by the National Congress.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

(Statesman.)

(Statesman.)

For many years past complaints have been made from time to time in the Indian Press that the public are afforded no opportunity of discussing or criticising the financial arrangements of the Government, which are usually published in the form of a Resolution in the Gazette of India. The difficulty has apparently been that under the provisions of the Indian Councils Act the Financial Budget cannot be presented to the Legislative Council for discussion unless it be connected with some project of law. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce, we are glad to see, have now taken up the matter, and in a letter addressed by them to the Supreme Government the committee very rightly thinks that this restriction is injurious to the best interests of the country. this restriction is injurious to the best interests of the country, and they therefore urge the importance of such a change in the law as will permit of the annual discussion of the Budget in the Legislative Council. While expressing the hope that their views in this respect will be shared by the Government of India the convergence of of India the committee point out that the proposed change will have the effect of strengthening the hands of the Government, and that in this view they are supported by the opinion of the Hon. James Wilson, the first Finance Minister of India. In a speech delivered in the Legislative Council in 1860 Mr. Wilson is reported to have said:—

"If we call upon the public to bear new burdens and to "If we call upon the public to bear new burdens and to make new sacrifices, however slight, we consider that we are at least bound to explain fully their necessity; and we are confident that if we can enlist public opinion in our favour at all it is by pursuing such a course. Sir, It is true we have no representative assembly to satisfy, and it would be only idle to speculate upon the time when India might have such institutions; but, Sir, we have a public opinion—an enlightened public opinion—both Native and European, and above all we have a free Press and free discussion, and we are of opinion that nothing but good can be derived from these useful, I may say necessary, elements of a prosperous social structure, by say necessary, elements of a prosperous social structure, by frankness on our part. It is by this course that we believe we can best perform our duty to this Council, and by which we can best enlist the sympathies and aid of the public in the heavy task which, for the public benefit of India, we are prepared to undertake, and in the success of which we have the utmost confidence, if we have only that fair share of support which we trust our proposed will be a support which we trust our proposed. which we trust our proposals will command.

Lord Mayo, speaking in the same strain on the 31st March, 1871, when Governor-General, expressed himself almost as strongly as follows:—

"The Government of this country is, in one respect, in an unfortunate position, for there is no assembly nor any means of discussion similar to that which exists in other countries,, whereby members of the Government can give immediate replies to statements made, and administer on the spot the negative to extravagant and inaccurate assertions. We are often obliged to wait for weeks and months before an answercan be given to even the most absurd accusations.

Six years later (March, 1877), Sir John Strachey in making his Financial statement publicly in Council, said the Government were glad to be able to return to the practice which had formerly prevailed of presenting the Budget to public discussion. And judging from the public utterances of Lord! Dufferin, the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce do not doubt the present Government shares these views with its doubt the present Government shares these views with its predecessors. There is, it seems to us, no good reason why the former practice should not be reverted to. The innovation is of comparatively recent years. Up to the year 1872 the Budget was always presented in public, but since then twelve Budgets have been presented, and of these only three were presented for discussion to the Legislative Council, the remainder having been published in the form of a Minute, Statement, or Resolution. The Committee point out that the financial proposals of the Government have not been before the Legislative Council of India in a complete form since the year 1882, and they very rightly remark that "to fulfil the proper discussions of finance, no partial or limited view can be effective," as "it is only by appraising correctly the relative and proportional value of these advantages that a wise financial arrangement can be arrived at," and they "believe that the free and public discussion of the financial arrangements as a whole would be of great value, not only as a means of eliciting whole would be of great value, not only as a means of eliciting information, but also as an accession of strength which no Government can afford to neglect."

The want of public discussion has, as the Committee remark, led to grave errors in the past, and they proceed to indicate a

In the year 1869 Lord Mayo's Government pledged itself to the early remission of the export duty on rice—a source of revenue which the Chamber considers a scandal upon the administration. Eighteen years have passed, and this pledge has not yet been redeemed. For several years past the attention of Government has been directed to the objectionable source of the revenue derived from surplus fees exacted from suitors of the revenue derived from surplus fees exacted from surcosin the Civil Courts over and above the actual cost of administering justice. It appears to the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce that nothing but absolute necessity could have maintained these sources of revenue in the face of public criticism. And yet in 1882 the Government found itself in a position to remit nearly three millions of taxation. The position to remit nearly three millions of taxation. manner in which this power of remission was exercised calls, in the opinion of the Committee, for hostile-criticism. The reduction of the Salt Duty was suggested by no complaint in this country. The tax fell lightly upon the people, and was well suited to their circumstances as being in accordance with their traditions. The abolition of the import duties are circumstances. of the import duties—specially those on textile fabrics—was doubtless a concession to English public opinion, swayed by its natural sympathy in favour of a Free Trade policy. But after all it was a concession to uninformed public opinion, in opposition to an informed public opinion which had no means of making itself heard. English public opinion is probably not informed of the incidence of the rice tax. The English Partiament can searcely be aware that the wice which rows have liament can scarcely be aware that the rice which pays here an export duty of 7½ per centum pays again an import duty of 15 per centum n Ceylon, the two together amounting to 22½ per centum on the value of the supply of food of the people, in a country like Ceylon, for whose Government the British Parliament is responsible. The committee cannot but believe that if public opinion in England had been properly informed such together would not have been constituted at the receiver. such taxation would not have been sanctioned at the very time the remission was insisted on of the moderate duty levied for revenue purposes on textile fabrics.'

In conclusion, the Chamber reiterate the necessity of a change in the law, permitting an annual discussion of the Budget in the Legislative Council. It is a demand in which they will have the unanimous support of the Press and the public in this country; and nowhere but in India would its necessity have been tolerated for so long.

THE INCOME TAX IN BENGAL. (Pioneer.)

The total demands in Lower Bengal during 1886-87 amounted to Rs. 39,36,958, of which Rs. 38,60,658 was actually collected, at a cost for agency of something less than three lakhs of rupees; making the net revenue Rs. 35,76,439. The Board of Revenue has reason to pride itself on the very high percentage, 98.5, of collections to demand. This calculation, as is only just, omits the taxes on the salaries of cofficials, who can hardly be credited with excess of virtue in prompt payment since their contributions are deducted from their income before the latter comes into their hands. On the other hand, in a total of 106,936 assessments there were 29,413 objections, more than twenty-five per cent. Nearly one-half of these were wholly or in part allowed, and the Bengal Government assures us, "that the petitioners were treated with consideration, and there was no unwillingness to modify assessments." This high percentage of allowed objections seems to indicate that the assessing officers went about their work in the first instance without sufficient inquiry, and that the "consideration" to which the Bengal Government refers was merely a more or less graceful submission to the facts of the case. In Calcutta itself the percentage of succesful objections is startlingly high; being 78.4, or three out of four. Wholesale over assessment such as these figures indicate is not the best way in which to endear a naturally offensive impost to the public. A considerable amount of pressure was used in effecting recovery, an average of 12 warrants being issued to every 100 assessments, and property was distrained in 6.3 cases per cent. The average incidence of the tax to the entire population of the province was Rs. 1 to every nineteen persons; but in Calcutta naturally the average was much higher, Rs. 2.8 to each person. But these figures do not show the comparatively small number, 1 in 677, affected by the tax. Incomes ranging between Rs. 500 to Rs. 750 per annum yielded the largest contribution to the exchequer, next came those between Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 5,000, followed closely by incomes of a lakh per annum and upwards. The commercial, mercantile and professional classes, including officials, were the largest contributors.

THE Mint Master of Calcutta suggests that the silver mint may be abolished there, but the engines and plant and engineer should remain in case of emergency. The copper mint may be permitted to continue, as it turns out a large quantity of copper coins, which supply not only the Bengal Presidency, but the Native States, Burma, and even colonial and foreign settlements. The copper mint should be maintained at a limited cost.

TINCOWRIE BANERJEE, proprietor of the Praja Bandhu newspaper, published at Chandernagore, has been sentenced to six months' hard labour. He started a lottery for one lakh of rupees, and announced that the first prize would be sixteen hundred. A Chittagong man drew the first prize, but on demanding payment he got only sixteen rupees, and he thereupon prosecuted Tincowrie. Ten days has been allowed him to appeal at Pondicherry. In the meantime, he has been released on bail.

THE Englishman has unearthed a hoax. A firm under the name of Barnett and Company, 10, Creek-row, Calcutta, published in the London newspapers an advertisement offering employment to forty clerks under an Indian Prince. Strong inducements were held out. The advertiser now states that there is no such firm, and that the affair is a hoax. He confesses that he devised it for the sole purpose of deciding a wager regarding the extent to which Europeans are willing to accept employment in India. By one mail 483 ordinary and ten registered letters were received containing stamps to the value of 4s. 6d. As a penalty the Englishman suggests that the joker might be left for half-an-hour in the hands of his wintims

The junior members of the Bengal Pilot Service would seem to be in a bad way, and if their case is receiving attention it is not before time. A correspondent assures the Englishman that seven mate pilots earned absolutely nothing last month, while he himself, a junior master of nearly nine years' standing, earned only Rs. 215. At the same time the seniors of the service, the branch pilots, are making Rs. 2,090 even in bad months.

THE case against Dr. Currie having closed, the solicitor for the prosecution said that they would withdraw the serious charges, and he asked the magistrate to dispose of the case himself on the charges of defamation and giving false evidence. If the matter were allowed to go to the Sessions, the solicitor said it would entail considerable expense upon the prosecution and inconvenience to witnesses, some of whom were in Burma, and others on steamers. The magistrate said that if the evidence before him disclosed the charge the prosecution wanted to withdraw, he could not shut his eyes to it, as it was not compoundable, and the law must take its course. On asking accused why a charge should not be framed against him, Dr. Currie asked for time to reply. The application was granted.

THE annual general meeting of the Bombay Cotton Trades Association was held on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 13, at the Chamber of Commerce rooms, under the presidency of Mr. R. L. Stewart. The accounts, which showed a profit of Rs. 1,000 on the year's working, were passed. The new committee for the ensuing year was elected, and Mr. Moir's scheme for the establishment of a clearing house in connection with the association was adopted, and the new committee were asked to take the necessary steps and provide the necessary expenditure for this purpose.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

STEPS are being taken in Simla to establish a new club, the Uncovenanted residents being dissatisfied with the privilege of being honorary members of the United Service Club. Already a meeting has been held, and Mr. J. Elston and Mr. Ker, manager of the Alliance Bank, have been appointed trustees. It is proposed to buy the building recently occupied by the Simla Bank Corporation.

At a meeting of the Senate of the Punjab University, the Lieutenant-Governor as Chancellor presiding, the resignation of Dr. Thibant of the Registarship was received and accepted with regret. This has been done with a view to the appointment of a full time Registrar, on a salary of Rs. 700 to Rs. 1,000, who will be equalified to hold the Principalship of the Oriental College. It was also resolved to advertise, and Mr. Rattigan, the Vice-Chancellor, was authorised to address Sir William Muir, Dr. Markley, Professors Cowell and Max Muller, likewise the Secretary of the Asiatic Society, London, in order to secure a really competent scholar for the post. Mr. Bell, of the Punjab Education Department, is to officiate as Registrar meanwhile.

An ingenious arrangement of punkha hanging, which is calculated to reduce the number of punkha pullers in barracks to one-fourth of the usual establishment, has been submitted for trial by the inventor, a subordinate of the Public Works Department at Campbellpore.

THE next Bengal Army List will include within its pages a record of the war services of the Native Officers in the Indian Army. This is certainly only a just recognition of the splendid work done by many brave men whose names unfortunately for themselves are seldom brought to public notice. In the Army List at present one can only single out the most distinguished among them by carefully studying the "Orders" which have been bestowed upon them, particularly that of the "Order of Merit," the Victoria Cross of the Native Army. Under the new arrangement their actual war services will be clearly shown. Many heroes of the Mutiny days are still with their regiments, and their records will be hard to beat.

THE THIBETAN QUESTION AGAIN.

It is now more than twelve months since the ill-fated Macaulay mission was demonstrated to have missed its aim, and was officially recalled, on the completion of the Anglo-Chinese convention relating to the British occupa-tion of Burmah. In this agreement was the following clause, which it will be as well to recall for the moment:

Article IV. Inasmuch as inquiry into the circumstances by the Chinese Government has shown the existence of many obstacles to the mission to Thibet provided for in the Separate Article of the Chefoo Agreement, England consents to countermand the mission forthwith. With regard to the desire of the British Government to consider arrangements for frontier trade between India and Thibet, it will be the duty of the Chinese Government, after careful inquiry into the circumstances, to adopt measures to exhort and encourage the people with a view to the promotion and development of trade. Should it be practicable, the Chinese Government shall then proceed carefully t consider trade regulations; but, if insuperable obstacles should be found to exist, the British Government will not press the matter

It will be remembered that at the time the agreement was made, Mr. O'Conor was strongly attacked for giving up the right we had acquired under the Chefoo Convention to send a mission to Thibet. A close and careful inspection of the texts in the two instruments will, however, show that the words in the Burmah document are more tangible than the somewhat vaguer language of the Chefoo Convention. By the former we secured the goodwill of the Chinese at some future time to carry out in a more permanent manner—when it should be a fait accompli—the opening of Thibet to British and Indian trade. We have before stated that there was no reason to doubt the ultimate good faith of the Chinese Government in the question. China has learned to pay some little respect to such promises, and to perceive in a clearer manner her duties and obligations to other Powers.

The time seems now to have approached when representations should be made to the Chinese Government with a view to the matter being carried through. As we do not doubt the goodwill of the Chinese in the matter, neither can we doubt their power. The decrees in the Peking Gazette relating to Thibet—even when shorn of the grandiose language in which they are couched—can leave little doubt but that it is the Chinese Ambans who virtually rule the country. This being so, the true solution lies at Peking, and not locally.

It is, perhaps, somewhat unfortunate that the question has to be approached through an unpleasant incident caused by the action of the Thibetan authorities in sending troops to Sikkim. This action, it may be remembered, was taken last year to bar the progress of the MACAULAY M'ssion, and though representations have been made the men have nover been withdrawn. The Indian Government has now resolved, first to address Peking to obtain the withdrawal of what prevents trade through the country, in what appears a very accessible portion of the Himalayas. Failing these means proving successful, it has already nominated a force to operate, if necessary, for their expulsion. All is stated to be ready for the expedition to start at a very short notice. This will surprise no one acquainted with the East, for we have already lost too much influence in the hill country. Sikking subsequent to the avents of 1861 has been under Sikkim, subsequent to the events of 1861, has been under British protection, and it has been out of a friendly regard to China more than anything else that we have tolerated what is virtually an invasion by the soldiers of a state which owns the Peking Government as its suzerain. Whether they were advanced in consequence of apparent vacillation of the MACAULAY Mission we need not now inquire. they have been permitted to remain too long there can be no doubt. We manifestly cannot tolerate this armed inroad on a state which is by treaty under our protection. It is distinctly an intrusion and an insult which cannot be submitted to any longer, and we confess ourselves somewhat surprised -viewing the friendly relations believed to exist between Peking and London—that the Chinese Government have not previously issued peremptory orders for the with-drawal of the troops. She confesses herself to be freely willing that commercial intercourse should be opened between India and Thibet. Her first step is to see that | her vassal withdraws from a place where she has assumed an untenable position, before the Indian Government has to use pressure to enforce the obligations it is under to Sikkim. We trust that no forcible measures will have to be resorted to, but that this withdrawal will speedily take place, and that the opening of Thibet by China will not be longer delayed. They move slowly at Peking, how-ever.—London and China Telegraph.

OPENING UP THIBET.

A correspondent writes to The Times :- The Burmah Convention in which we promise not to urge the Chinese to open Thibet until they have had time to use their influence on the people and reconcile them to the presence of foreigners, was only ratified last summer; distances in Asia are vast; the difficulties of communication are very great; and it would not be unreasonable to ask for a little further time for Chinese to the presence of foreigners, was only ratified last summer; distances in Asia are vast; the difficulties of communication are very great; and it would not be unreasonable to ask for a little further time for Chinese advice to operate on the minds of the Lamas of Lhassa; for, as to the people, they seem to be friendly in the highest degree, and delighted to trade on fav. urable terms with anybody. No traveller has to complain of ill-treatment at their hands; they seem to be a kindly, hospitable race, and probably even the hostility of the Lamas, due apparently to their fear for certain trade monopolies of their own, is not in superable. Chinese influence, it would appear, must first be exercised on the Chinese Ambans, or Residents, at Lhassa, for they seem to be the real leaders of the hostility to the opening of the passes rom Sikkim, and as the Chinese Government can speedily overcomethis, we may hope before very long to hear that a British mission can proceed to Lhassa. We have, as a matter of friendliness to China, and in recognition of the difficulties with which she has to contend in the government of a vast and ill jointed territory, with little beyond the most primitive methods of communication, agreed to give her time to fulfil her contract to us; that time is running on rapidly, and soon she may reasonably be called upon to carry out herengagements. The Tsung-li Yamén could scarcely take exception to this, and very likely would not; for there is no real reason to believe that China wishes to shirk her engagements in regard to Thibet. But if China is suzerain at all, if her alleged rights are not mere shadows—they certainly appear by the memorials in the Peking Gazette to be very real and effective—she cannot complain of being urged in due time to exercise them in order to perform her part of her agreement with us. There is no real ground for believing that the Chinese now have the faintest objection to intercourse between India and Thibet; their political fears, born largely of an ignorance of geogra and it would appear essential that this matter should be cleared up with China. Here we have Chinese officials referring to Chinese suzerainty over Sikkim as an established fact, and we have the troops of a Chinese vassal—a vassal, too, whose administration is practically carried on by the Chinese authorities—occupying a State nominally, under British protection. No consideration of possible friction at Peking ought to deter the Government of India from having Chinese relations with this state placed on a clear and unmistakable footing. Nothing tends more to the continuance of friendship between States than a definite and comprehensible distinction between meum and tuum. The move of the Chinese Residents—for in all probability they are the responsible parties—in placing a military post in Sikkim has given Lord Dufferin an opportunity of opening the direct route from India to Thibet such as has not offered itselff since Warren Hastings more than 110 years ago sent Bogleto Teshu Lumbo to see the principal Thibetan authorities on the subject. Thibet is practically the last of the hermit nations of Asia, Korea having now opened her ports to foreign trade, and there are no reasons, political or other, why she should continue so. The people have no objection to foreigners, the rulers object only because of their own monopolies, and the Chinese Government has no objection in principle to intercourse between India and Thibet. One of the first points to which the attention of the Peking authorities should be directed is the obstructive and unfriendly conduct of their Ambans at Lhassa. Whether this be a continuation of the traditional policy of China in Thibet—and there seems little doubt that the Ambans at Lhassa. Whether this be a continuation of the traditional policy of China in Thibet—and there seems little doubt that the Ambans at Lhassa. Whether this be a continuation of the direct one, while that through Nepaul, as a glance at the map will show, is roundabout, is that there is a railway direct from Calcutta to Da

It is understood that the Indian Government is desirous of settling the Sikkim difficulty directly with China through diplomatic channels, but is, at the same time, prepared, and determined, if needful, to forcibly expel the Thibetan troops, who are blocking the road through Sikkim to Thibet, and all is ready for the despatch of a punitive expredition at short notice.

The Standard has a telegram from Calcutta as follows:—Another pacific attempt is to be made to open the route from British India to Thibet. Things at present are in much the same state as they were when the Macaulay Mission found its way barred. The troops despatched by the Thibetan officials, who are opposed to the admission of foreigners, are still in the territories of Sikkim, and block the road from Darjeeling to Thibet. As the Raja of Sikkim is, nominally at least, politically dependent on the Government of India, this is a clearly aggressive step. Orders were given some time ago by the Government of India for an expedition to clear the intruders out of Sikkim to open the Weylapa Pass, and thus restore the freedom of the trade route to the interior. The Derby Regiment, one Ghoorka Regiment and one mountain battery, had been definitely named for the duty. There is, however, another change of policy at headquarters. Hopes are entertained that by the good offices of the British Minister at Peking the Chinese Government, as the Suzerain Power, may use its influence with the Thibetan officials to remove the present impediments to free intercourse, or at any rate to procure the withdrawal of the Thibetan outposts from Sikkim soil. pacific attempt is to be made to open the route from British India to Thibet. Things at present are in much the same state as they were Among the explorers, remarks a Bombay paper, who have added most to our knowledge of the Home of the Ghoorka and the Abode of the Great Lhama are the two native travellers known as A—K and M—H, who are working in connection with the Survey of India. The latter has recently returned from a tour in Nepaul and Thibet, and the results of his observations have been published under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel H. R. Thuillier, Surveyor-General. M—K travelled through a wild, inhospitable country, and had his true mistravelled through a wild, inhospitable country, and had his true mission been discovered his life would probably not have been worth half an hour's purchase. Accompanied by four servants, whom he had engaged at Kumaon, he travelled in the disguise of a physician, taking with him a stock of European and native medicines, but carefully hiding his scientific instruments. He was frequently detained by officials—in one instance his detention continued for several weeks; but cofficial virtue was never able to resist the combined attacks of importunity and opportunity, and M—K soon discovered that gold was a key which opened all doors. His journey has added much to our knowledge of both Nepaul and Thibet.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

D-4, R.A., were to leave Agra on Dec. 22, en route for England.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL C. W Townsend, Royal Artillery, has been appointed to command the Royal Artillery, Lahore.

COLONEL C. A. MOORE, Bombay Cavalry, Pension Paymaster, Southern Konkan, is proceeding home on furlough on private affairs.

THE Government of India have sanctioned cavalry rates of pay to the men of British infantry regiments employed as mounted infantry in Upper Burma.

Colonel F. C. Keyser, C.B., commanding the 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers, will be placed on half-pay, on completing six years' service as Lieutenant-Colonel.

THE Burma medals will soon be ready for use. The Calcutta Mint has turned out 50,000, and the work of putting them together has been entrusted to a Calcutta jeweller, Mr.

John Boseck. BRIGADIER-GENERAL COLLETT, at present commanding a brigade in Burma, becomes permanent on the brigade establishment in Bengal, in succession to Sir John Hudson.

A good service pension has been conferred upon Colonel Sir Edward Sladen, late of the Madras Staff Corps, and upon Colonel (Brigadier-General) George Hodding, C.B., now of the Madras Staff Corps.

OWING to the prevalence of cholera in the Poona Districts his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief has decided not to hold the Camp of Exercise next month. The Marine Battalion will not, therefore, now move to Poona.

It has been definitely settled that the Commissariat head quarters are to be removed from Bombay to Poona, and the officers in charge have been warned to expect their orders very shortly.

REPORTED INCREASE IN THE INCOME TAX.—The Bombay Sanachar says:—The rumour that the next budget will announce an increase in the income tax is gaining ground throughout the country. The people regard with dismay the prospect of an increase in this unpopular tax. We think that instead of resorting to such a measure, in order to meet the heavy expenditure that has to be made on the frontier defences, the Government should reimpose the import duties on Management. the Government should reimpose the import duties on Manchester piece-goods. The duties were repealed by the English Government, simply in order to serve the purposes of party, and their reimposition would bring in a large revenue to the Indian Government. The Government ought also to carry out with judicious rigour the policy of retrenchment.

BOOKS. NOTICES OF

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

It is not without its significance, as an indication of the change for the better which even a few months of "staple Government" have wrought in Ireland, that articles on "the burning Irish question" are, in so many monthlies, conspicuous by their absence; and it is, we may hope, a good omen for the New Year that public attention can, during the recess, be directed to other and less threshed-out subjects.

Among such topics reforms of our fiscal system hold a place second to none. And to these two articles in the present number of the National Review are devoted. "A Liberal Unionist" argues against what he is pleased to term "the Protectionist Fallacy." It is right that this matter should be discussed fully and freely; but a man almost puts himself out of court who avers (p. 713) that a competent man who takes a farm with adequate capital can do as well "in agriculture as he can in any other business." When a country is, as the "Unionist" tells us is our case, unable to produce the food required by its population (p. 712), his remedy is to remain where we are, on no account to tax corn, and thus, with a constantly-increasing population, to become more and more dependent on the foreigner. How many millions sterling have, during the last forty years, been lost to a country, whose imports, consisting largely of food-stuffs, exceed its exports by a hundred millions sterling annually? We are never surprised when we read violent denunciations of "Fair Trade." We can usually see underlying them a sort of uneasy consciousness Among such topics reforms of our fiscal system hold a place when we read violent denunciations of "Fair Trade." We can usually see underlying them a sort of uneasy consciousness that "Free Trade," as we practice it, is eminently Unfair Trade. And so it is. England is very powerful, and very wealthy. But all power and all wealth are limited; and one thing England cannot do. It cannot for ever fight the battle of the chimera yclept "Free Trade" against a Protectionist Dealing with the cognate subject of commercial "Malaise and its Causes," Mr. Mavor dissects the arguments of Mr. Giffen in a late address to the British Association, and impugns—we think with much success—many of the "data" impugns—we think with much success—many of the "data" on which they are founded. But mere subtleties, however valuable in argument, must give way to facts. Nearly every industry is, as Mr. Mavor shows, on the decline rather than on the rise; and as regards agriculture—our most important industry—the fact that in 1872 32 millions of acres, in 1885, 22 millions were under wheat, speaks trumpet-tongued to any one whose prejudices have not blinded his perception. As Mr. Mavor most sensibly remarks (p. 650):—"The mere amount of our external commerce is unimportant compared to the influence of its conduct upon domestic industry."

We are entirely in accord with the estimate formed by "Q."

We are entirely in accord with the estimate formed by "Q." of Lord Salisbury's foreign policy. We can grudge the Premier no possible praise for the single-mindedness and ability with which he has successfully safeguarded his country's interests during a most difficult period, during one, too, in which the Gladstonian faction have left no stone unturned to persuade "the civilised world" that England was "a kingdom divided against itself." As to the future, "Q." appears to us to be in the present "ticklish" condition of European politics—far too optimistic. Recognising the fact that we are in safe hands. too optimistic. Recognising the fact that we are in safe hands, let us not leave out of sight another fact—that, in present circumstances, we really do not know what a day may bring forth. The Bulgarian sore, the threatened recrudescence of which Lord Salisbury has done so much to obviate, is the subject of a paper by Mr. T. W. Legh. It is difficult to form a due estimate of the value of political conclusions or forecasts arrived at during a flying visit to any country; but Mr. Legh will find few to disagree with him in his warm appreciation of the exceptional aptitude for self-government displayed by the Bulgarian nation, and of the ability of the present Bul garian ministers.

Visitors to Rome will be interested by Mr. E. S. Morgan's article on "Rome and Malaria," in which the measures adopted, or to be adopted, by the Italian Government, in order to minimise the area, and the effect, of this terrible infliction, which is the scourge of the Italian capital for half the day throughout half the year, are set forth. It is not a little curious to observe that the Italians are following the same plan as was adopted by those notable engineers, the ancient Romans. ancient Romans.

Lady Magnus contributes a really interesting Paper, on "Charity in Talmudic Times," which will be new reading even to those who have seen Emanuel Deutsch's excellent Essays on the Talmud. "A Belfast Merchant" depicts Ulster in very different colouring from that employed in the December number of the Westminster Review; while in a paper on Abbé Liszt, under the title "A Magyar Musician," Mr. Paul Sylvester gives a pleasant account of the eccentric composer to whom, be it remembered, the world is indebted for Richard Wagner's first introduction to its notice.

A MEMOIR OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON.*

Few men of letters from the other side of the Atlantic are better known than Emerson. This circumstance is in part, of course, due to the fact that on more than one occasion he visited this country, but it is also ascribable in some degree to the greatness of the man himself. He was a born leader of thought; the look, the style, the action, the everything of Emerson stamped him as a genius to whom ordinary mortals would perforce pay the homage due to mighty intellect and would perforce pay the homage due to mighty intellect and transcendent intellectual powers. Such being the case, Mr. Cabot's intelligent biography of the illustrious American litterateur will be welcome. It is sure to be read with interest and re-read with pleasure. Itself denoting considerable literary skill, the charm of the man is enhanced by the charm of the pen with which he is portrayed. The work has but one defect the absence of a portrait the absence of a portrait.

As for Emerson himself he has been most felicitously described by Dr. Holmes. He was "sparing of words, but used them with great precision and nicety. To hear him talk was like watching one crossing a brook on steppingstones. He was always courteous and bland to a remarkable degree; his smile was the well-remembered line of Terence workton out in living features. But when anything said degree; his since was the well-remembered line of Terence written out in living features. But when anything said specially interested him he would lean towards the speaker, and with a look never to be forgotten, his head stretched forward, his shoulders raised like the wings of an eagle, and his eye watching the flight of thought which had attracted his attention as if it were his prey, to be seized in mid-air and consider the bis certic."

carried up to his eyrie."

With regard to his ideas it is perhaps charitable to draw a veil over them, at least in some directions. Impracticable in reference to the daily routine of life, he was still more idiosyncratic in matters of religion; combining the heresies of free thought with a keen sense of devotion and piety, he seems to have unsettled his own mind and to have desultory paths of speculation and discussion.

The chief interest in these volumes will doubtless centre in Emerson's descriptions of the great men—notabilities of this country. The public will read with avidity the pages which Emerson's descriptions of the great men—notabilities of this country. The public will read with avidity the pages which tell how Carlyle was an immense talker, and altogether as extraordinary in his conversation as his writing; how Wordsworth was a "bitter old Englishman;" how Macaulay was the "king of diners out," having the "strength of ten men, immense memory, fun, fire, learning, politics, manners, and pride;" how Emerson was "contented" with Tennyson, whom he proclaims as "quiet, sluggish in sense and thought, refined as all English are, and good-humoured;" how Lady Byron was "a quiet sensible woman, with the merit among others that she never mentions Lord Byron or her connection with him, and lets the world discuss her supposed griefs or joys in silence."

world discuss her supposed griefs or joys in silence."

But time bids us separate ourselves from Mr. Cabot's work, which is an addition to the eminent lives of eminent men.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS ON THE CONGO.+

Adventures and tales of daring always enlist popular sympathy, and, judged from this standpoint, the "Boy Travellers on the Congo" is likely to meet with a full share of public patronage. Condensed as it is from Mr. Stanley's well-known volume, "Through the Dark Continent," it records the numerous deeds, alike heroic and interesting, of that most intrepid of travellers. of travellers. Not a page but what contains an account of some act of bravery, some fight for life. At one time it is a struggle with man, with odds too fearful to bear reflection; on another occasion it is a contest with nature, where again the chances of success are much in favour of the rushing, foaming river, which, tearing along, sweeps in its mad embrace all that dares to resist its mighty efforts and defy its monstrous

But it is not only in regard to stirring scenes and perilous enterprise that Colonel Knox's book merits perusal. It depicts scenery so lovely that imagination fails to portray anything more exquisite and fascinating. It speaks of boat races in the heart of Equatorial Africa; it describes queer fashions and quaint costumes; it tells how over in these dreary wilds human nature is the same as in the crowded cities of Western civilization. Surely there is apple mental fare here to satisfy civilisation. Surely there is ample mental fare here to satisfy the most craving of cravers! There are also some excellent one most craving of cravers! There are also some excellent pictures, serving to give a clear idea as to the scenes through which Stanley and his adventurous youths passed; but no! One and one only lived to reach the goal of his venturesome aspirations. Both the companions of the American voyageur died on the road—the latter alone was successful, and left footnints on the pages of time footprints on the pages of time.

At the conclusion there is an interesting account of Mr. Stanley's subsequent visit for the second time to the mighty Congo, when in charge of the Expedition deputed by the King of the Belgians to establish settlements on the banks of the River, which his former journey had opened out to Western enterprise. This information makes the "Boy Travellers on the Congo" a complete mine of information regarding this magnificent but as yet little known portion of the habitable world. We have perused the volume with deep interest, and can promise readers who follow our example a rich harvest of profit and pleasure.

A book has just been sent out to India, which it is intended to distribute gratuitously throughout the three Presidencies. It is entitled "A Popular Treatise on the General and Domestic, Medical and Military History and Uses of 'Sanitas' in India and the Tropics generally." Mr. C. T. Kingyett, a well-known analytical chemist, was the first to discover that the healthy atmosphere of a pine wood or a eucalyptus forest is due to the presence of peroxide of hydrogen (a most important antiseptic) and camphoraceous substances produced by the atmospheric oxidation of the essential oils secreted by those trees, and that these valuable natural purifiers can be produced from common turpentine. Mr. Kingyett then invented a method of preparation which brings their total healthful principles within the reach of the public, and gave to these products the name of "Sanitas." The author adds, "The inventions are the result of a close study of the chemistry of Nature and the application of her method to the artificial pro-Nature and the application of her method to the artificial production of materials capable of imitating her hygienic work with the greatest exactitude." In the chapter on "The Essentials for a good Disinfectant in India and the Tropics genreally "we are told that carbolic acid is poisonous—dangerous to human and animal life, the odour irritating and sickening, is corrosive, and will burn and injure animal tissues; cannot be used with safety on board ship; spoils delicate cargoes, bedding, &c.; cannot be used for the preservation of meat and food generally; and is unsuitable for use in breweries, either for cleaning the casks or preserving the grains; and is not sufficiently volatile, and must therefore be brought into actual contact before it will disinfect or deodorise. To meet these objections "Sanitas" and its products have been introduced into India. The book is very carefully put together, and the value and uses of the various Sanitas products are clearly shown, and supported by testimonials from many of the leading members of the medical profession and medical Press. Sanitas has a great future in India apart from its value as a disinfectant. The Sanitas manufactures are susceptible of a variety of applications to the purposes of everyday life in India, and it will not be long before history will repeat itself in India, and say as the Times did (July 21st, 1879), "A very brief experience appears to have take its place as a reliable of Sanitas' will now been sufficient to prove the erally" we are told that carbolic acid is poisonous—dangerous brief experience appears to have been sufficient to prove the value of 'Sanitas,' which will now take its place as a valuable antiseptic and disinfectant." The book is a complete guide to sanitation in India, and should be largely read by all classes

Colonel Rivett-Carnac continues his interesting series of Indian papers in the Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for January, his fifth paper dealing with the "Progress of British Arms in India, from the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle iu 1748 to the fall of Dupleix in 1754." Of course, Colonel Malleson has gone over the same ground in his well-known work, the "French in India," but Colonel Rivette. known work, the "French in India," but Colonel Rivett-Carnac manages to collate and arrange the results of his readings excessively well, and this condensed story of the progress of our power in the East will, no doubt, find many appreciative readers. To tell the story of the life of George Washington would also seem to be going over already well-trodden ground, but, judging from the opening chapter Colonel Cooper-King promises to tell an old tale well and interestingly. C. J. L'Estrange contributes a very useful paper on the military system of Switzerland. The Sketches in Burma, from an eye-witness, do not fall off in the merit of fairly illustrating the details of the late troublesome campaign. The Editor provides pabulum in the shape of a serial and a Christmas Eve story for lighter readers, and "Furlough" gives the doings of the month in his usual pleasant, unaffected manner. Captain H. C. Simpson deals with the question of artillery reorganisation, and Major-General Mitchell contributes a scant and rather disappointing paper on "Military Photography"—a subject worthy of more exhaustive treatment than he has given to it.

INDIA TO-DAY.

Whatever fears are present at this moment in England regarding "the situation in Europe" it must be a matter of pride and satisfaction to all Englishmen to know that the New Year dawns upon a contented, loyal and prosperous India. At the close of the year 1857 this journal reproduced in its columns the celebrated article on the centenary of Plassy which appeared in the Friend of India from the pen of the late Mr. Mead, and which gave at the time such dire offence to the Government of Lord Canning. Reviewing the hundred years of the East India Company's raj which had just expired the brilliant journalist wrote:—

The qualities of mind which enable a man to accumulate wealth are often those which hinder him from making a proper use of it. It was necessary for the conquest of Hindustan that the East India Company should exist, for it is only the intense greediness of traders that could have won for us the sovereignty of the country. The enemies of the Company's rule assert that they made and broke treaties, planned and fought battles for the mere love of gain. Whatever degree of interference with public or private rights was needful for the purpose of collecting the revenue received instant and eager sanction; whatever concerned merely the welfare of Asiatic souls, or the social interests of the great body of Englishmen and Hindoos, was either coldly ignored or bitterly assailed.

They imparted for their own use the might of civilisation, but never cared to exhibit to the nations its beneficent features. Wealth embodied all the attributes of their good deity to whom was rendered with cheerful devotion the homage of heart and brain. The evil principle was symbolised by power, and when they failed to vanquish they fell down and worshipped. Without a spark of patriotic feeling they set on the brow of England a gem of priceless value; without care for Christianity they paved the way for the overthrow of idolatry. Be it so, but the evil which they wrought has well-nigh passed away; the good, of which they have been the not unconscious instruments, will go on multiplying for ever.

When these words were written India was in the throes of the Sepoy Mutiny; our hold on the country was as by a thread; order had gone, confidence had been lost, and there was mutual distrust between the rulers and the ruled. The prospect was indeed dark; and the journalist was bold who prophesied that good would come out of all that evil. But he did not venture to fix the coming of that good till another hundred years should: have passed away, for, as he put it, "a hundred years is but a small point in the lifetime of a nation. It may be a period of sowing or of reaping the harvest of giant labours such as shall influence the destiny of remote generations, or of utter folding of the hands to sleep." He despaired almost of the conversion of the Mahomedans of India to the honest acceptance of British rule. "They will never tolerate," he wrote, " or forgive our supremacy. We may load them with blessings, but the reward will be curses. We stand between them and a fancied earthly paradise, and are not classed in their list of good angels.'

Had not the cruel waters of the Hooghly closed when they did over the head of this gifted writer he might have lived to see one part of his prophecy fulfilled, and another part of it falsified within thirty years. The morning of this year of grace, 1888, finds India loyal, contented, and prospering, and finds also in the Mahomedans of that country the staunchest friends to British rule. Writing under the shadow of the great Mutiny it was hardly possible. perhaps, to write otherwise than distrustfully of Mahomedan, Mahratta, and Rajput. But the whirligig of time has brought in noble revenges, and to-day our old enemies are our faithful friends, helping us heartily in consolidating and strengthening the Empire we have won from them, and ready to do battle upon our side against any Power which would dare to dispute its possession with us. As a contrast to the state of India at the close of 1857 let the words of the Viceroy at the Peshawur durbar at the close of 1887 be taken. Lord Dufferin, speaking in Persian to the Chiefs and Sırdars, said :-

I have spent the last fortnight in a tour along the British border district from Kurrachee northwards. I have found throughout a peaceful frontier, firmly held and firmly administered, and I have been gratified to observe as I passed evidences of the material prosperity which everywhere follow the establishment of British rule—cultivation and wealth increasing among the people, great lines of strategical and commercial railways spreading themselves over the face of the land, friendly relations existing with the rulers and the people of the independent tracts beyond our frontier—these and other hopeful and inspiriting signs of strength and progress have met me on every side, and now that I have arrived in this historical city of Peshawur, I am impressed by the same significant facts. The railway has brought me here through a peaceful and prosperous country, and I stand at this moment surrounded by loyal and contented subjects of the Queen, and by the friendly chiefs and representatives of independent tribes, whom I am rejoiced to welcome in Her Majesty's name.

This is the condition to-day not of Northern India only, but of the whole of British India, from Cape Comorin to the Himalayas. Freedom is secure, law and order are respected, education is spreading, religion protected, trade and commerce thriving; peace reigns, and prosperity is spreading over the land. The latter part of Henry Mead's prophecy was that "With the passing away of the present cloud (that of the Mutiny) there will dawn a brighter day for England and India. We shall strengthen at the same time our hold upon the soil and upon the hearts of the people-tighten the bonds of conquest and of mutual interest. The land must be thrown open to the capital and enterprise of Europe, the ryot lifted by degrees out of his misery, and made to feel that he is a man if not a brother, and everywhere Heaven's gift of climate and circumstance made the most of."

Who shall say that these things are not being done to-day, with Heaven's blessing, under British rule? And this truth being acknowledged, who will dare to doubt or question the stability and permanence of that rule?

IN MEMORIAM—SIR ROBERT MONTGOMERY, G.C.S.I., K.C.B.

[COMMUNICATED.]

ONCE again it has fallen to us to take up the pen of sadness, and record the death of another of the great and the mighty of the land. The severity of an English winter has taken from our midst Sir Robert Montgomery, member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, one of the ripest and most experienced of the chosen band who in matters relating to the East are charged with the duty of giving to the authorities the benefit of advice and judgment.

Upwards of sixty-six years ago a stripling arrived in India destined in the fulness of time to be one of the handful of heroes in whose lap a grateful country poured forth honours without stint and showered praises with layish hand. The story has been told again and again, but it will bear repeating, for it conveys a lesson of life which all would do well to lay to heart.

For years young Montgomery passed an uneventful career in the Bengal Civil Service; always ready to do his duty, well spoken of by his superiors, he had made no mark above and beyond his compeers. But in 1849 the second Punjab War left the Sikh dominions at the disposal of the Paramount Power. John Lawrence was called upon as Chief Commissioner to administer the newly-annexed province, and amongst the small but carefully selected band associated with him was Robert Montgomery; and right well the work was done, so that in a comparatively short space of time the North-West Frontier was a model spot within the red line. To serve under "John" was the aim and object of aspirant to fame and honour. Thus eiglapsed, till the news flashed from east every years west, from north to south, that India was in the throes of rebellion. Then came one of the greatest struggles in which this country has ever taken part. England's sway tottered in the balance, and right nobly did England's sons perform their part. What happened in regard to the Punjab is matter of history; the centre of activity, the centre of danger, was Delhi. If that city, the capital of the Mogul Empire, were wrenched from the Imperial diadem; if the insurgents could float the flag of rebellion in place of the standard of Great Britain, then the sun of power would set behind the horizon of annihilation; then every single soul, from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin, would have to fight for dear This was a danger which must be averted at all hazards, so John Lawrence determined to denude his province of European troops. No sconer was the decision made than steps were made to carry it into effect. disaffected Native soldiers were disarmed; every single British regiment was hurried off to the north, and upon the heads of the various districts devolved the duty of keeping the peace of his own domains. All did well, but none better than the subject of our memoir. crisis was met. India was saved, and nought remained but to reward the doers of the great deed. The thanks but to reward the doers of the great deed. The thanks of Parliament and a Civil Knight Commandership of the Bath fell to Montgomery's share, to be shortly followed by the succession to the supreme control of the province in which he had won his spurs. For five years Sir Robert Montgomery wielded the sceptre of power; and when he retired after the allotted span a successful career found its closing years happy, peaceful, and honoured in the favoured and coveted post of Member of Council.

Pre-eminently safe and cautious in all his doings, he was consulted at every turn on the many occasions when great principles were at stake, and great problems under discussion. His knowledge of India, at any rate as regards the North-West Frontier, was unrivalled, regards the North-West Frontier, was unrivalled, added to which his instincts were invariably sound. He seemed to divine by intuition what would be the right thing to do. As a man it would, perhaps, be impossible to speak too highly. Sincere, honest, straightforward, a Christian of the purest and most lovable type, he never made an enemy, he never lost a friend. Guileless in himself Montgomery imputed no guile to others, and he has passed to his rest honoured, beloved, full of years, and carrying with him the respect of every single soul with whom he came in contact. Peace to the ashes of the mighty dead! His memory is his monument. We will linger over his life, and shed a tear over the grave of as noble a hero as ever trod the shores of the sunny East.

KEEP YOUR GAME IN VIEW. TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It is necessary to teach the Dacoits of Upper Burma that the British Government has not only a long and powerful arm, but that its sight is keen. Brigands must learn that they are not safe when they escape the bullets of the police and run away home, and resume the agricultural employments of well-behaved peasantry. A captured Dacoit, whether wounded or not, is usually in a fit state of mind to tell the magistrate who his accomplices are, the villages in which they usually reside, and the places where plunder is concealed. Magistrates ought to keep accurate lists and brief histories of the accomplices who have for the time escaped from the grasp of justice; and it will often be found, when a peaceable-looking villager is arrested, that he has been concerned in five or six dacoities.

In 1859 the province of Oudh was in a very disorderly state owing to gang robberies, but as the members of the gangs were gradually run into jail, they learned to distrust their numerous companions, in whose numbers they formerly trusted, though they soon found, that out of twenty-eight or thirty rascals, many would be eager to turn Queen's evidence.—Your obedient servant, December 27th.

OBITUARY.

SIR ROBERT MONTGOMERY

Sir Robert Montgomery, whose death took place on the 28th ult., at the advanced age of seventy-eight, was the son of the Rev. Samuel Law Montgomery, rector of Lower Moville, county Donegal. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1828, and after filling with credit subordinate offices in the North-West Provinces was transferred to the Punjab by the Marquis of Dalhousie, and took an important part in the organization of that newly-subjected province as, successively, Commissioner of the Lahore Division, member of Board of Administration in association with Henry and John Lawrence, and Judicial Commissioner. It was in the latter capacity and as representing in the absence of his chief, Sir John Lawrence, the civil power at Lahore, that he shared with the military authorities the grave responsibility of the momentous decision under which, immediately the seizure of Delhi by the mutineers was known, the large force of Native troops in the neighbouring cantonments of Mian Mir were summarily disarmed. This hazardous operation was successively performed by a single weak European battalion, and was the earliest masterstroke of that resolute policy which carried the British Empire safely through the critical populating from the cudden defection through the crucial trial resulting from the sudden defection of nearly the whole of the overgrown Native army. It was speedily repeated at Peshawur and wherever a sufficient force of European troops was available, and not only assured the peace of the Punjab, but rendered possible the subsequent conversion of that country into the base of operations for the crownservices on this critical occasion were ungrudgingly acknowledged by Lawrence; he was selected by Lord Canning to succeed Sir James Outram as Chief Commissioner of Oude; and was principally instrumental in enforcing the revised policy of the Governor-General in effecting the pacification of that dis ordered province. The rapid and complete success of his administration led to his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab in succession to Sir John Lawrence, and he continued to hold that important office until his return to England in 1865. Although the times in which he acted called not seldom for the exercise in an eminent degree of called not seldom for the exercise in an eminent degree of stern masculine qualities, there was probably never an Englishman in India who was so generally beloved by the Native communities with which he was brought in contact. One of the districts of the Punjab is named after him, and a memorial hall at Lahore erected by the voluntary contributions of all classes attests his widespread popularity. He had gained in an equal degree the confidence of the Government under which he served and of its subjects whose interests his life was passed served and of its subjects whose interests his life was passed in promoting. Within a few years of his return to his native in promoting. Within a few years of his return to his native land Sir Robert became a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, to the assistance of which he brought an experience exceptionally valuable from its having been acquired in the discharge of the hightest political functions during a crisis which exacted all the powers and resources of the national character for the maintenance of the Queen's Empire in India. Such experience is from the nature of the case becoming yearly more rare, and the lives in which it has been embodied must as they pass away be mourned as an irreparable loss to the State. Sir Robert was created K.C.B. 1859 and G.C.S.I. 1866.

General Nassau Lees writes with regard to Sir R. Montgomery:—The modesty of Sir Robert was so great that, except those who served under him (and by 99 out of 100 of them, I am safe in saying he was beloved as much as he was respected) few knew his sterling worth. So much of the milk of human kindness remained stored in the inner recesses of his heart, that he had an ample store to enable him to be levish in acts of good-will generosity and kindness recesses of his heart, that he had an ample store to enable him to be lavish in acts of good-will, generosity, and kindness to all who were in need of his aid or assistance. It was these qualities which earned for him the soubriquet of "Pickwick," by which he was long known by his subordinates, and fellow Civil servants in the Punjab—certainly it was from no want of firmness of character, for it was to Sir R. Montgomery's foresight, prudence, and courage, more than anything else, that Sir John Lawrence and the Government of India owed the safety of the Punjab during the mutiny of the Bengal Army in 1857. I allude to the disarmament of the Native troops at Lahore by Sir Robert during the absence of Sir John Law-Lahore by Sir Robert during the absence of Sir John Law-rence. The amount of cool courage which this act required, to say nothing of the responsibility it involved, and the terrible risks a subordinate officer ran in giving the order should the attempt have been made without success, those only who were on the spot at the time can fully realise.

THE Duke and Duchess of Montrose have arrived at Agra. from Jeypore. They were to be his Highness the Maharaja of Bhurtpore's guests at Agra, and put up at Hariperbat.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Son e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthur (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Yoice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian oceple.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian becopie.

The Magarine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally doofle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to iournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of option is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is su piled direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

"Dr Tien's little book will be found a valuable guideto the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordunary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of efficial titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENEUM

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be o the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—Daily News.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—Overland Mail.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." Trubner's Record.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done gorg service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."— ROAD ARROW.

DIAMANTÉ BRILL

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Mesers. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand morde and slite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Potorsburg. They are invaluable for internixing with and replacing partures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Caust Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finestBrazilian Diamonds.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 23rd December; from Allahabad and Madras to the 21st December; and from Calcutta to the 20th December.

H.E. THE VICEROY arrived in Calcutta on the afternoon of December 17th, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Montrose, Sir Mackenzie Wallace, and Lord William Beresford.

LORD REAT has had a very busy time of it at Ahmedabad, where he has delivered several speeches, principally on the educational requirements of the city. He has visited the experimental well on the banks of Sabarmati, and, while congratulating them on the success of the scheme, pointed out the necessity of sanitary improvements.

THERE is no further news of any consequence from Nepal. It seems clear that there was a certain amount of dispersing among Ranbhir Jung's party after the skirmish in which they were defeated; but on the other hand, as nothing has yet been heard of their recrossing the frontier, they must be still able to show some sort of a front.

THE Afghan Boundary Commission had settled the new line up to the Murghad river on the 8th December, and the last pillar on this section was expected to be built by the 18th. The party were then to march towards the Oxus to mark the strip of territory east of Dukchi. All were well by latest accounts, and the work was going smoothly and rapidly.

THE proposed camp of exercise at Poona has been abandoned, owing to the alleged prevalence of cholera in the district. In the present month, however, there have only been a few isolated cases in three talukas, chiefly in villages forty miles from Poona on the Nasik Road. The disease has at no time assumed an epidemic form.

THE great bridge over the Ganges at Benares was opened by the Viceroy, in honour of whom it has been named the Dufferin Bridge. A fatal accident occurred at it some hours after the opening ceremony. A young man named Clarke fell from the bridge, and was drowned.

The opening of the Marmagoa Bailway, which was fixed to take place at the beginning of the New Year, has been postponed to the end of January or beginning of February next.

News has come to India of the death of Sirdar Baluch Khan, chief of the Khetran tribe, who died suddenly at Barkhan on the 8th of last month.

THE Aman-ul-Mulk, Ruler of Chitral has sent two students to Peshawur for instruction in English and medical science.

ORDERS have been received by the Wali of Basrah abrogating the prohibition against the export of horses from Turkish Arabia.

H.S.H. Prince Henri D'Orleans, with Count de Boissy, have visited the ancient capital of Aurangabad, after which they paid a visit to the famous caves of Ellora, en route to Nandgaum. The Count and Countess Moreas did not accompany them.

THE Senate of the Bombay University has, after a long debate, referred the proposed Bill to consolidate and amend the acts relating to the University to a special committee.

THE Maharajah of Bhownugger, who has been on a prolonged visit to Bombay, has returned to his State.

H.H. THE MAHARANI of COOCH BEHAR returned to India by the last mail steamer.

THE MAHARAJAH OF MYSORE has arrived in Bombay on a visit. After a week's stay he proceeds up country.

H.H. THE MAHABAJAH OF JEYPORE proposes to visit Calcutta towards the end of January.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOT takes over the Public Works portfolio from Sir Theodore Hope.

THE appointment of Mr. Moore and Dr. Guru Das Banerji to the Bengal Legislative Council is notified in the Calcutta Gazette. The Hon. G. C. Paul is also reappointed to the Council.

MR. GUILFORD L. MOLESWORTH, Consulting Engineer for State Railways, has returned to Calcutta from his Madras tour.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN and staff have arrived at the Hyderabad Residency. Sir Howard and Lady Elphinstone and Sir Horace and Lady Rumbold are also guests of Mr. Cordery.

The latest report shows that the total area sown with cotton in the Bombay Presidency is 1,013,000 acres, or 6.42 per cent. below the area of 1886-87, or 13.14 per cent. above the average of the three years ending 1886-87.

It is proposed to make a testimonial to Rao Saheb Vishvanath Narayen Mandlik, C.S.I., late member of the Supreme Legislative Council, in recognition of his "long, zealous, and distinguished public services."

New swimming baths have been opened in Calcutta by the Lieutenant-Governor.

THE Government of India have decided to await the results of friendly intervention with the Chinese Government before undertaking an expedition against Thibet.

It is practically settled that Ayub Khan will come to SEVERAL officials lately belonging to the staff of Ayub Khan have arrived in Kurrachee.

THERE is no thoroughly authentic news from Afghanistan.

THE Manzal tribe is reported to be finally submitting and making terms with the Ameer.

SEVERE fighting at Khost is said to have taken place between the inhabitants of Jadran and the Khost tribes.

SMALL dacoities are reported from parts of Burma.

THE march of one of the four columns which were to have co-operated for the pacification of the Yau country has been countermanded.

THERE is every probability of the country between Chittagong and Burma being thoroughly explored this cold season.

RUNBIR JUNG is reported to have invaded Nepal with a force of two thousand men.

The expedition met with a check at Kalya-Berewan, which place was captured by the Durbar troops. Reinforcements have been sent for from Khatmandu.

THE whole of the West of India Portuguese Railway system is now ready for through traffic. Aformal inspection has been made, and a train has passed over the Ghat.

Now that there is to be no camp of exercise at Poona it is expected that his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief will take up his residence in Bombay early in January.

THE Gazette of India contains a resolution of the Government of India on the working of the Indian Companies' Act during 1886-87. At the close of 1885-86 there were in different provinces 806 joint stock companies, with a nominal total capital of 2,854, and an actual of 2,100 lakhs. Forty-five of these who increased their capital with a paid-up capital of 9 lakhs ceased to work. One hundred and fifty-eight companies, with a nominal capital of 193 lakhs, were registered during the year. The nett result at the close of 1886 87 was a total of 886 companies, with a nominal capital of 2,913 lakhs. The actual, so far as reported, was 2,138 lakhs. Bengal, Bombay, and Madras head the list with a paid capital at the close of 1886-87 of 968, 872, and 144 lakhs respectively. The largest part, 911 lakhs, of the aggregate is invested in mills and presses. Bombay shows the largest contribution with 619 lakhs, chiefly for working cotton; Bengal following with 196 lakhs, chiefly for working jute. Tea and other plantations follow with a total of 362 lakhs, mostly tea, registered in Calcutta. Banking and loan companies follow with 324 lakhs, Bengal being first with 174 lakhs, Madras next with 77 lakhs. Trading companies rank fourth with 316 lakhs, Bombay having 147 lakhs, and Bengal 141 lakhs. Mining and quarrying engage 98 lakhs, Bengal 78 lakhs, Madras 10 lakhs. Other industries and icemaking about 21 lakhs, and breweries 12 lakhs. The increase in companies in the past seven years, 1880-81 to 1886-87, was as follows:—475, -.500, 547, 649, 696, 805, and 886.

NOTES.

THE news to-day from India by wire and Overland Mail continues to be of the same quiet and uneventful nature as we have been glad to chronicle for some time past. Reuter cortainly telegraphs on the strength of a paragraph in the Calcutta Englishman that Tibetans are entering Sikkim in large numbers, and that it will probably be necessary for the Government of India to consider the advisability of despatching a force thither, but this need not create any alarm. We are not likely to enter upon another little war; tact and diplomacy will no doubt arrange all difficulties with our troublesome friends on that frontier satisfactorily.

FROM Afghanistan and the North-West frontier the news is reassuring. The last pillar on the Murghab section has been erected by the Boundary Commission in the presence of General Alikhanoff and Colonel Taikhanoff, Governor of Penjdeh, together with some German travellers and a Turcoman escort. The English and Russian officers exchanged hospitalities.

THE Moscow Gazette, while recognising the present satisfactory relations between Great Britain and Russia, is condescending enough to give the former some advice gratis. It recommends England to abstain from participating in any coalition of the Central European Powers "in order to conciliate Russia, and thus secure a peacoful possession of India, which is England's greatest interest." This scores well for cool audacity, but then it should be remembered that Russia has now Dhuleep Singh as an ally.

That foolish person has allowed a couple of letters written by him from Moscow to a friend in Paris to be published. He complains that M. Grevy did not behave courteously to him, as he sent him no answer to a request that he might reside at Pondicherry under French protection. "But that matters now very little," writes Dhuleep, "as my destiny has brought me to the feet of my Sovereign, the Emperor of Russia, whom I am prepared to serve with my life should he ever desire to employ me in his service." And he signs the letter, "Dhuleep Singh, Sovereign of the Sikh nation, and prond implacable foe of England."

This, of course, is very "high fulutin," but we have always believed that there was something to be said on Dhuleep Singh's behalf, and we are confirmed in that belief by the perusal of a communication received by the Editor of the Asiatic Quarterly from a distinguished and long-experienced Anglo-Indian officer, and published in the current number of that able Review.

THE writer says that Dhuleep Singh assured him that he never understood the true nature of the Agreement of Bhyrowal, which he signed, and by which he made over his kingdom to the British in exchange for a life provision of £40,000 a-year, until after the death of Colonel Oliphant, his officially-appointed counsellor, eleven years ago. If this be so we can only say that we find it difficult to account for the long delay, for the Agreement in question was signed in December, 1846. According to the statement in the Review, after he had studied all the papers, and mastered all their details, "his feelings were those of a ward who had suddenly made the discovery that his guardian had swindled him out of his ancestral estate ... Even then, however, continues his friend, "there was time to avert a catastrophe, inevitable unless promptly stayed. The bestowal upon him of English rank and of a permanent income proportionate to that rank would, whilst constituting an advantageous arrangement on the whole transaction for England, have sufficed to soothe his wounded pride, to atone for the confiscation of private estates and of a kingdom. But whou nothing in that way was done for him, when the money necessary to pay his debts, large as it was, had to be wrung by importunity, his whole nature changed; he gave up the hall at Elvedon, and the shooting which with him became a passion, and from the friend of the English became their inveterate enemy."

THE writer concludes with an appeal to the English people not to be bitter against a man who has been driven wild by the conviction of the wrongs he has received. "It wild by the conviction of the wrongs he has received. It is with him an honest conviction, and I believe that it lies still within the power of the British Government to restore to him his lost tranquillity by repairing the wrong which was undoubtedly perpetrated in 1849." If any arrangement can now be come to to win Dhuleep Singh back to a better from of wind one are the condition of the condi frame of mind, and so put an end to a grave political scandal, it is to be hoped that such an arrangement will be attempted and carried out successfully. "We have no wish," says the Editor of the Review, commenting upon the communication quoted, "to exaggerate the importance of Dhuleep Singh, nor do we think that the sums of money he received from first to last were inadequate to his legitimate claims. But too often they were given in the shape of doles, and after delays which deprived them of much of their value. He will find Russia a worse paymaster, however, and after a short period of expectation and disappointment we have no doubt that he will be in the frame of mind to listen to a judiciously worded intimation that his material interests will be served by making his surrender to us in imitation of the example set by a still bitterer foe of the English, Ayoob Khan." We hope that this may be so.

AYOUB KHAN, according to the Times telegram, leaves Meshed this week, and it is reported that his destination is Kurrachee. He is said to be very happy in finding himself under British protection, as is also King Theebaw, who is said, however, to be in bad health, and is to be removed from Ratnagari to the hill-station at Sattara. His condition or fate, it is stated, does not excite any interest among his late subjects. The Burmese are supposed to have long memories, but they can afford, perhaps, to forget a monarch who very often forgot that they had bodies or souls worth caring for.

TRADE and navigation reports of India for November TRADE and navigation reports of India for November show the following results as compared with those of the same month in the previous year:—Value of imports, Rs. 7,00,85,129, against Rs. 6,69,24,368; exports, Rs. 6,31,48,050, against Rs. 6,31,61,090; import duty collected, Rs. 22,95,653, against Rs. 25,23,312; export duty Rs. 2,35,871, against Rs. 2,86,069. We would remind our readers that a very interesting paper on "The Tea Industry of Ceylon, with reference to Tea Culture in India and other British Possessions," will be read to-morrow (Tuesday) evening at the Royal Colonial Institute by Mr. John Loudon Shand (late M.L.C., Ceylon). The chair will be taken at 8 P.M. by Sir John Coode, K.C.M.G.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA JAN. 8.

Several Khyber chiefs are about to visit Calcutta, accompanied by Major Warburton, the Political Officer in charge of the Pass. It was originally proposed that the number should be limited to seven, but there seems to have been a general desire to join the party, and now it is believed that it will consist of over 100 chief. sist of over 100 chiefs.

The son of the Ameer of Chitral is also expected here shortly. His visit is an earnest of the good relations now existing between the Indian Government and that State—relations which are by no means the least important of the steps recently taken to safeguard the frontier of India.

The Supreme Government has addressed a long despatch to all local Administrations on the subject of discipline and moral training in schools and colleges. The despatch begins by admitting that the general extension of education has in some measure resulted in the growth of tendencies unfavourable to discipline and favourable to irreverence in the rising able to discipline and favourable to irreverence in the rising generation, and then it proceeds to discuss how such tendencies should be controlled and directed. The recommendations on the subject made by Lord Ripon's Education Commissionare quoted and commented on, and the Government expresses the opinion that, although good so far as they go, they do not go far enough. The Governor-General in Council considers that the principles on which a proper standard of discipline should be based may be found in the following directions:—First, providing efficient training schools for teachers; second, extending a system of teaching having direct bearing upon personal conduct; third, the repression of breaches of discipline in accordance with certain well-defined rules; fourth, the introduction of conduct registers; fifth, the extension of the introduction of conduct registers; fifth, the extension of the hostel or boarding-house system; sixth, the introduction of a system of school monitors; and seventh, the exclusion from school of boys who have not reached a certain class by a certain age

Each of these heads is then discussed in turn. Local Governments are informed that in the truest interests of education the cost of providing training schools for teachers should be recognised as the first charge in the educational grant. The second head is complicated by the State policy of neutrality in religious matters, and it is proposed that an attempt should be made to carry out the suggestion of the Education Commission by preparing a moral text-book, based on the fundamental principles of natural religion. A paraon the fundamental principles of natural religion. A paragraph is devoted to the question of punishments, and recommends the imposition of tasks, deprivation of privileges, a judicious use of the rod when local feeling permits its use, and, finally, expulsion in gross cases. Stress is laid upon the admany, expulsion in gross cases. Stress is laid upon the advantage of well-managed boarding-houses, and it is stated that the monitorial system has been tried with success in some Indian schools. It is further suggested that weekly meetings should be held by the principal and professors of colleges to consider questions of discipline, and that considerable powers of punishment should be given to them.

The whole subject is then commended to the early and careful attention of local Administrations as one the importance of which cannot be exaggerated, and they are asked to submit their views without delay. Anyone who has seen much of Vative schoolboys of the present day will admit that the ques-tion of introducing more healthy discipline has not been raised too soon.

The European and Anglo-Indian Defence Association of Calcutta have followed the lead of the local Chamber of Commerce, and have addressed the Government on the question of discussing the Budget in Council instead of publishing it in the official Gazette. It is not, they say, satisfactory that annual statements of financial transactions rivalling in magnitude those of the mother-country should be withdrawn from the notice of the only body competent to discuss them. The Government, the only body competent to discuss them. The Government, they urge, would gain strength by adopting a popular course, and while they see many reasons for adopting the suggestion of the Chamber of Commerce they see not a single reason against it. It is now a considerable time since the Chamber moved in this matter, but the Government has not yet given any reply, although the Press and the public, both European and Native, have spoken almost unanimously in favour of the

The Maharajah of Mysore arrived at Calcutta last week, and exchanged formal visits with the Viceroy on Thursday.

A conference of divisional commissioners of Bengal was held at Calcutta lately, which it is believed may result in some important changes in the existing system of administration, especially as regards the present civilisation under the Board especially as regards the present civilisation under the Dollard of Revenue.

The James and Mary Sands in the Hooghly River, the scene of the loss of the British India Company's steamers Mahratta and Arcot last summer, nearly proved fatal to the same company's steamer Almora last Wednesday. The Almora was coming up the river, and while trying to avoid collision with a country boat grounded close to the wreck of the Arcot. Luckily she did not, like that vessel, capsize. The passengers were landed at once, tugs were sent to help, and after several hours of hard work she was eventually got off next morning. hours of hard work she was eventually got off next morning.

BURMA.

Rangoon, Jan. 7.

The seventh and last official bulletin reports favourably as to the condition of Mandalay and district. Myadoung, Shwebo, and the Ruby Mines districts show some improve-

In the Meiktila district the Kyouktan village was attacked and burnt by a band of Dacoits 300 strong. One policeman and four villagers were killed, and 40 prisoners, with a quantity of property, were carried off by the Dacoits. A body of cavalry pursued and overtook the Dacoits, recovering some property and releasing some prisoners.

A mixed force of military and police have killed Bosan and captured one of his followers.

General Sir R. Low's force in the Yaw country find considerable difficulty in moving, owing to the difficult nature of the country, whose these are no roads. Small columns are however, traversing the district in all directions. The people are friendly. Strong measures are being taken to disarm the Pagyee district, where the late rising occurred. Owing to the vigorous action of General Low's cavalry in the district between Men and the Mon river, many dacoits are surrendering vigorous action of General Low's cavalry in the district between Men and the Mon river, many dacoits are surrendering and giving up their arms.

The road having been found impracticable, it has been decided that the Ghoorkha regiments shall come from and go to Munipoor vià Chindwin river.

Much greater difficulty than was originally anticipated has been experienced in opening up the routes between India and Burma. The Irrawaddy Flotilla Company have sent a party to explore the Irrawaddy above Bhamo, that portion of the river having hitherto been unexplored. The exploring party have reached the junction of the Irrawaddy and Myingai rivers, twelve days' journey from Bhamo. They were unable to proceed further without escort, owing to the menacing attitude of the wild tribes inhabiting the district. The channel is found navigable for 150 miles for steamers of very light draught. A cataract prevents further navigation. The country seems rich and fertile, and abounds with game. To the north and east are mountain ranges some 6,000 feet high. The Wunnun and Palan routes to China are closed for two years, owing to the wild tribes blackmailing the Chinese caravans. The furthest British outpost will be established at Hokat. An exploration party, however, proceeded six days beyond Hokat. The Mogoung river is now being surveyed by the same party.

Some time ago I referred to the sale of public lands made same party.

Some time ago I referred to the sale of public lands made to officials at Mandalay and the abuses which had arisen and were likely to arise in connection therewith. The Government of India called for a return of all land held by officials in Upper Burma, and have just decided to issue a series of regulations as to the alienation of public lands to officials. These regulations will prevent any abuses, while affording all fair facilities to officials wishing to erect residences. When Government land is available at any station sites will be leased for twenty-one years to those officials who must live there, at such rent as the Chief Commissioner fixes, on the following conditions:—They will have to build houses on a plan and at a cost approved by the Chief Commissioner. The officials will bind themselves not to transfer the land, and undertake to lease the houses they erect to their successors in office at a rent fixed by the Public Works Department. It is presumed that those who recently obtained permanent hereditary and transferable titles to valuable lots of public land without competition and at nominal prices, will now be required to relinquish such land.

General changes are about to be made in the Burma Commission. The Burmese Commissioner of Mandalay goes on furlough. He will be succeeded by Colonel Strover, officiating Commissioner of Arracan, who will be replaced by Colonel Spearman, Deputy Commissioner of Rangoon. Colonel Spearman is an officer of proved capacity. Colonel Street, Commissioner of Pegu, and senior officer of the Burma Commission, leaves in a few weeks. Colonel Street, who has served thirty years in Burma, has secured the confidence and esteem of all classes and races in the province. During the formidable rising in Pegu in 1866 he rendered valuable service. Mr. Hodgkinson, who acted as Commissioner on special duty, succeeds Colonel Street. Mr. Ireland, Commissioner of the Irrawaddy division, has left on furlough, and does not return. His successor is not decided on.

ECCLESIASTICAL TOURISTS. (Daily Post).

A fashion has grown up of late years of well-to-do Englishmen visiting this country. In former times it was considered necessary for a young gentleman to do the "grand tour;" now India has to be done. Since the Prince of Wales visited the country the numbers coming here from England in the cold weather have been on the increase, and at this time of the year the outward-bound steamers are crowded with people who will only remain for a few months. It is not, however, of cold-weather visitors in general that we wish to speak to-day, but of a certain section of them. The Church Missionary Society has sent out a number of clergymen, and also some laymen, to inspect the missions, and to preach to all and sundry—Hindus, Mahomedans, and Christians. The question arises when we hear of their arrival—are they required? A second—why do they come? It cannot be said that the Christian community of this land is greatly in need of teachers. On the contrary, few people are better provided with religious instructors than are those who worship in our churches and chapels. There is abundant accommodation, as a rule; the religious instructors than are those who worship in our churches and chapels. THE LOT OF THE PLANTER IN INDIA. (Madras Times.)

(Madras Times.)

It is the misfortune but not the fault of the planter that, though there is nowhere a steadier and more hardworking body of men, taken as a whole, than the class which he represents, he is yet liable to as many risks and changes of fortune as the veriest gambler on the Stock Exchange. It is instructive to look at the history of the last ten years, and the probable present position of a young fellow who became a planter, say, in 1877. After looking about and working, more or less, for a year or two, he perhaps invested in a coffee plantation, coffee being at a high level at that time. Scarcely had he done so when prices began to fall, leaf disease became steadily worse, and the probability is that he was on his last financial legs by about 1885, and was lucky if he managed to pull through, though in all likelihood with a much deteriorated property, to the present time of plenty. Supposing he had planted cinchona, which was also a highly remunerative industry in those days (Lewis and Peat's Circular, dated February, 1879, showing that nothing under 5s. 8d. per lb. was realised for Madras bark, and quoting Sulph. of Quinine at 11s. 3d. per oz., whilst a year afterwards it was 12s. per oz.), that he had selected the right class of plant and suitable land—rocks on which many a cinchona planter came to grief—he would have had to watch the steady fall in prices, whilst his plantation came into bearing, culminating in the present miserable quotation of the unit, and no immediate prospect of improvement. Tea was fetching high rates ten years ago, rates which the planters of to-day are not likely to see again, and can only look back upon with regret.

"Ah, for the days beyond recalling, Ah, for the golden days!"

must often be the cry of owners of tea and cinchona as they contrast their present account sales with those of yore, and feel tempted to wish that Ceylon might be engulfed by an earthquake. Then, besides the fluctuation of the market, the planter has to reckon with other agencies, even more uncon trollable. He may at any time find green or black bug fastening on his best fields of coffee; leaf disease he has long been accustomed to; and borer is a name which makes the inhabitant of the Coorg "bamboo" district tremble at the ghastly reminiscence. A heavy storm at blossom time may render the previous care and expenditure almost useless, whilst whole fields of cinchona may die out from canker, rust, or that mysterious sickness which everyone has his theory about, but which no one can put a name to. Tea has its blights, not to mention the pressing attentions of the porcupine, and unseasonable weather does damage impartially. Now and again the planter is threatened with total extinction at the hands of a Date-Coffee Company, or some one announces that he has discovered how to manufacture quinine synthetically at a coast of 3d. an ounce.

On the whole, therefore, it may be conceded that the planter's life, though sometimes a profitable is not always a happy one, and it is not wonderful that he exercises to the full his British privilege of grumbling. Perhaps he is too much inclined to look upon Government as his natural enemy, and to use the subject as a safety valve for his annoyance at some of the numerous other ills to which planting flesh is heir. The planter does not consider that the executive pays sufficient attention to the wishes and requirements of his community—one representing considerable capital and large employers of labour. The iniquity of Government Cinchona. Plantations is a standing theme with him, and he waxes bitter over refusals to grant land, grazing restrictions, and general obstruction. He is great at petitions and memorials, but in a spasmodic way. Periodically he works himself into the belief that his grievances will be attended to if properly brought to the notice of Government, and he sends in or presents his petition. It is rejected, but he does not lose heart. Another, and perhaps a third follows, meeting with the same fate, after which he gradually realises that the matter is hopeless, and subsides into a steady course of grumbling for the next year or so. On the other hand the official is apt to regard the planter as a well-meaning but hopelessly wrongheaed man, who is always "asking for more;" who if his desire for a particular star were granted to-day, would request that the moon be given him to-morrow; who does not know what is good for him, and quarrels with those who do; in short, as an unavoidable nuisance, and as one of the crumpled rose leaves of official life. But there are other themes besides his relations with Government on which the planter can, and does, expiate. He will rise to eloquence on the enormity of Agents' charges and London rates, and will express his desire that the next shipment of his produce may be lost on the way home, in order that he may realise the insurance money. Sometimes the pr in order that he may realise the insurance money. Sometimes the pressure of circumstances is too much for him; and, if he is fortunate, he goes into the Police, the Survey, or the Salt. Perhaps he finds a grim pleasure in becoming one of the officials with whom he has hitherto been on terms of armed neutrality, and devoting himself, like the elder Mr. Weller when he announced his resolve of keeping a pike, to "taking it out of" his fellow-creatures.

The planter is usually as jovial as the depressing influences of low prices, his misfortunes and grievances will permit him to be, and, as far as his means will allow, his hospitality is a remnant of old times. He is always ready to help a brother planter who is down in the world, and, in spite of his grumbling against Government, there is no more ready volunteer. His occasional bitterness is mostly assumed. Much as he would appreciate five shillings a lb. for his cinchona bark, he fully recognises the blessing of cheap quinine to a poor and fever-stricken population; and his desire for a cataclysm in the region of Ceylon is strictly coupled with the impossible proviso that no damage should be done to life or fortune. Thus the planter is a good fellow, and it would be more to the purpose if, instead of informing him that he ought to have more capital, as our late Governor did in his Farewell Minute, he were given every official assistance to make the most of what he has.

SERICULTURE IN INDIA.

The interest awakened within the last year or so in the revival of the silk industry in India has extended to Madras, and the Board of Revenue there have set about making some systematic arrangements for the collection of cocoons and the rearing of silkworms through the aid of the Forest Department. So far as we are aware this is the most systematic proposal yet made to overcome the uncertainty in the production of cocoons from wild silkworms which arises from the peculiar conditions under which they are propagated. For this reason of occoons from wild silkworms which arises from the peculiar conditions under which they are propagated. For this reason it deserves the careful attention of the authorities in Assam and elsewhere, where this difficulty has hitherto prevented the tussar silk trade from assuming the dimensions natural resources seemed to warrant. What may be expected from trade, if it is once found possible to regulate the annual production, may be judged from the returns of filling's silk exports last year. Wild silk in the form of realed silk in the control of the second warrant. silk in the form of reeled silk, chasm (waste) and cocoons were exported to the extent of 443,140lbs., being nearly 30 per cent. of the whole exports of raw silk in these forms. The Assistant Secretary to the Finance Department has always taken a gloomy view of the future of India's silk trade, and in his latest Report, in face of the fact that the quantity of raw reeled) silk increased last year by no less than 25½ per cent and the value by 48½ per cent, he expresses the opinion that the silk produced by the mulberry worm of Bengal has but little chance of success in competition with the silk of Europe, China and Japan, and he is extremely doubtful whether the tussar silk trade "possesses elements of permanence." The investigations made some time ago in Bengal, however, showed very plainly that the failure of the local mulberry worm could be otherwise explained than by supposing an inherent and be otherwise explained than by supposing an inherent and irremediable inferiority, and we must wait till we see the effect of such measures as the Madras Government are taking before we assume that a permanent and important trade in tussar silk is an impossibility.

BOMBAY COTTON SPINNING INDUSTRY.

(Times of India.)

(Times of India.)

The success of the Bombay cotton spinning industry is causing much excitement in Lancashire just now, and at the quarterly meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce it was resolved to hold a full inquiry into the whole question. In India, in 1876, there were 1,100,112 spindles, in June last year there were 2,421,290—that is, they have been more than doubled. Nor is this all, for the consumption of cotton per spindle has risen from 72lbs. to 117lbs. Of the total number of 2,421,290 spindles in all India no less than 1,779,220 are at work in Bombay. The increase within the last fourteen years has been at the rate of 94,933 spindles per annum—that is, five times as rapid since 1873 as it was before. The Manchester Guardian quotes these figures in order to show that the extraordinary increase has occurred since 1873 when the French Mint laws were suspended, and the great divergence between the value of gold and silver began. "Is there," asks the Guardian, "any connection of the nature of cause and effect between the changes in the Indian and English standards of value and this greatly accelerated rate of English standards of value and this greatly accelerated rate of progress?" And this was the branch of the subject most earnestly discussed by the members of the Manchester Chamber. Bombay manufacturers know their superiority and mean to maintain it. They will follow the results of the Manchester inquiry with much interest, and will be ready to learn what lessons they can. But they will resist to the utmost any English interference in the hours and regulations of Indian labour—and this, we are sorry to see, the Manchester papers are beginning to suggest. A young industry, however thriving, cannot afford to let itself be hampered by interested rivals. The work in the Bombay mills, though the hours are nominally long here, is very light, and for every hand employed in the Bombay mills there are dozens anxious for employment. We have no more faith than Mr. Bythell or Mr. O'Conor in bi-metallism as a cure for the grievance of Manchester. We can afford to deplore them. But there is one remedy, and one only, for the present state of things. Let the Manchester capitalists bring their money out here and meet the Native manufacturers fairly on their own ground. The more of them that come the better will it be for Bombay, and the Bombay working classes—and the better, we imagine, for Manchester itseif. interference in the hours and regulations of Indian labour

ENGLISHMEN AND INDIANS. (Burdwan Sanjibani).

The English rule has effected considerable changes in the administration of India. Many will admit that in several instances those changes have done good. The people of India do not now wish for the end of the English rule. They only wish for reforms in the administration of the country. The English rule is not free from faults, but in spite of this the people of India do not wish for its subversion. They believe that the shortcomings it now has will be gradually removed. Those who consider the Natives are rebellious are in error. It is a matter for deep regret that even now the Government enter-tains this belief to a considerable extent. The Arms Act is an instance in point. However, there is in this world no man who is free from shortcoming or error, and it is no wonder that the Government has shortcomings and errors. The people of India have been in contact with the English for 150 years, but feelings of mutual love have not as yet been established between these two races. The people of India are admirers of the English rule, but they do not approve the actions of individual Englishmen. The liberality which is displayed in framing rules is not shown to us with regard to our treatment. When the Mahomedans first came to the country they showed hostility to the Native shows to the individual treatment. nrst came to the country they showed hostility to the Natives, but as their rule was prolonged, they began to be friendly with us. But the English have been among us for a long time, and good feeling has not as yet prevailed. Rather the good feeling which existed before is being ruined. Several English gentlemen say that the Natives do not mix with them, so the gulf which now exists is attributable to the shortcomings of the said Natives. This gulf the English may easily remove if, instead of hating us, they treat us as younger brothers. It will not be removed through the efforts of the Natives. Its removal entirely depends upon the English. entirely depends upon the English.

BENGAL.

THE actual receipts from nine months' sales of Bengal opium and eight months' duty on opium exported from Bombay, has amounted to Rs. 6,13,47,675, which is Rs. 19,44,125 below the estimate. Of this latter amount Bengal opium has contributed Rs. 16,36,775, and Bombay opium Rs. 3,07,350.

THE remains of Mr. H. Dear have been brought from Mussocrie to Monghyr for interment. Mr. Dear was the son of a Polish Jew, who cast him off as a young man on his becoming a Christian. This happened after the family came to India, and Mr. Dear turned his hand to dealing in hides for a livelihood. He prospered amazingly in business, and was known for many years before his death as one of the wealthiest Europeans in India. He was also a man of boundless beneficence and charity, dispensing benefactions on a princely scale, and for the most part through religious channels. A considerable part of his enormous fortune was left by his will to religious and charitable objects.

Mr. F. H. McLaughlin, C.S., has been granted by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India an extension of furlough for three months. Mr. W. H. H. Vincent, who has recently been appointed to be a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, a consistent when the covenanted Civil Service, is appointed to be an Assistant Magistrate and Collector in the Dacca Division, and is posted to the sudder station of the district of Dacca. Mr. C. J. Stevenson-Moore, who has recently been appointed to be a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, been appointed to be a member of the Covenanted Civil Service, is appointed to be an Assistant Magistrate and Collector in the Burdwan Division, and is posted to the sudder station of the district of Midnapore. In modification of the order of November 24, 1887, the furlough for eight months granted to Mr. H. N. Harris, District Superintendent of Police, under the order of March 7, 1887, has been extended by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India to fourteen months. The following gentlemen are appointed to act, until further orders, as Assistant Superintendents of Police:—Mr. H. C. L. O'Bamber and Mr. W. A. Gayer. Dr. W. Forsyth is appointed to be Civil Medical Officer of Beerbhoom, on being relieved of his appointment as Civil Medical Officer, Tirhoot State Railway.

Mr. N. C. Bose, on behalf of a Burmese named Kalan.

Mr. N. C. Bose, on behalf of a Burmese named Kalan, applied to the Calcutta Police Magistrate for a warrant against Mr. Joseph Isaac Joseph for criminal breach of trust and cheating. The solicitor stated that in September last complainant, who was in Mandalay, pledged a ruby with accused for Rs. 35,000. In December accused came to Calcutta, followed by complainant, who requested him to sell the ruby at the highest price he could possibly obtain. Accused informed complainant that he could not get a higher figure than Rs 75,000 on which he was told to part with it. He however formed complainant that he could not get a higher figure than Rs. 75,000, on which he was told to part with it. He, however, according to the complainant, seems to have sold the ruby to one Munna Lall, a johurry, for Rs. 95,000, and credited complainant with Rs. 75,000. Out of the latter amount he deducted Rs. 35,000, the sum advanced, with interest thereon, and paid complainant the balance. Accused had left Calcutta on the following day for Mandalay. His Worship directed an Inspector of Police to institute inquiries, and report thereon. The police officer reported that he had traced the ruby to the purchaser, Munna Lall, who said that he had purchased it for Rs. 85,000. His Worship directed a subpœna to be issued on Munna Lall for the production of the ruby, after which his Worship would pass orders in the matter.

MADRAS.

ONE of the results of the Finance Committee's visit to Madras was that considerable reductions were made in the establishment of the Public Works Department. These reductions are thus noticed in the Administration Report of the Department for last year, which has just been issued:—At the suggestion of the Finance Committee, the Government, in the Financial Department, restricted the Provincial share of the cost of public works establishment to Rs. 6,50,000. The grants for public works under Imperial heads of service for the year 1887-88 were, at the same time, considerably less than those previous years. In framing the preliminary issue of Provincial budget for 1887-88, it was found, as a consequence, that the contributions from other funds, on account of establishment, amounted to only Rs. 13,70,614, against Rs. 16,35,424 in the previous year; and the total provision for establishment, including the Provincial contribution, amounted to Rs. 20,20,614, against Rs. 24,59,156, the grant for 1886-87. A large reduction of establishment therefore became necessary, and, at the end of February, 1887, the services of the entire temporary establishment attached to the department were dispensed with. This temporary establishment had been gradually entertained during several preceding years to meet the expanding operations of the department, and, at the time of this reduction, consisted of seventeen temporary engineers, about eighty upper subordinates, and a large number of office and inferior servants, the whole costing about three and a quarter lakhs per annum. The reduction was carried out in the midst of the best working season, and caused much inconvenience to the department, but to the credit of administrative officers it may be said that it was effected without friction of any kind.

LORD CONNEMARA, in distributing the prizes to the pupils of the Thondal Mundalum Anglo-Vernacular School, Madras, made some interesting remarks on primary education in the Madras Presidency. He said:—"I can assure you that I have the cause of primary education very deeply at heart, and, although this school teaches something beyond primary education, I am very glad to see, from the number of small boyston, I show that they seems to be the chief work and the chief business. here, that that seems to be the chief work and the chief busihere, that that seems to be the chief work and the chief business. Primary education, unfortunately, is in a very backward state here. I am glad to see Mr. Grigg, the Director of Public Instruction, here this evening. There is no person in India who has the cause of primary education more at heart than he has. Only this day I have been looking over some work of his which will have the effect of giving a stimulus to primary education in this Presidency. I think one of the great objects that we all ought to have in view is not to fly too high. We should make primary education as easy as possible. In order to do that we should not make the test too high. Nowadays we are inclined to make the test in the examinations too high, and the consequence is that we do a great deal of harm to the health, both of the pupils and also of the teachers. But I am all in favour of getting boys and young men to go out to the health, both of the pupils and also of the teachers. But I am all in favour of getting boys and young men to go out into the highways and byways of the Presidency, and teaching children in the Vernaculars in primary and elementary subjects, which, unfortunately, a vast number of our population are still in ignorance of. We have, I believe, in the Presidency now only about one out of five of the population going to school (amongst the boys), and that shows what a very great deal there is to be done. I am very glad indeed to have the opportunity of seeing you all here to-day. I hope every one here will do what he can to promote the interests of this school and of all schools founded on the same principles as this is. and of all schools founded on the same principles as this is. and of all schools founded on the same principles as this is. We have all heard with very great pleasure the invocation, in Tamil and Telugu, at the beginning of our proceedings. It was a most admirable invocation, and it is one that I am quite certain every one who has a respect for the Almighty could join in with the greatest sincerity. But I have a word to say to the boys who have received prizes. I am very glad to compare the boys who have received prizes. gratulate them upon receiving such a gratifying testimony of their work. I observed that many of the books that they have received may be of very great use to them in after life, and I hope the boys will make good use of the books they have received. I have also to say a word to those who have not received prizes: I hope they will not be discouraged, and that next year, if I am spared to come here again, I shall have the pleasure of presenting them with prizes. I was also have the pleasure of presenting them with prizes. I was also very glad to see that, amongst the vernacular prizes that I have given away, are many books which have been translated into the vernaculars. For instance, Smiles' 'Self Help,' a book which everybody who wishes to earn an honest livelihood book which everybody who wishes to earn an honest livelihood can study to the greatest possible advantage. It is very gratifying to people who are interested in the spread of pure literature to know that the managers of this school have made such a good selection of prizes. There is a vast field before us for good which we can accomplish by increasing the number of translations from English books—books of a simple elementary and useful character."

DR. R. E. BHANDARKAR, professor of Sanskrit in the Deccan College, has been invited by the American Oriental Society to be an honorary member of it. A LARGE and influential meeting of the leading members of the Native community has been held at the residence of Sir. D. M. Petit to consider the advisability of raising a testimonial in honour of the Hon. Rao Saheb V. N. Mundlick, C.S.I., "for his great and distinguished services to this country generally, and Bombay in particular." Sir D. M. Petit, who was called to the chair, briefly recounted the Rao Saheb's various services rendered to his countrymen. An influential committee was appointed to consider what form the testimonial should take. About five thousand rupees were subscribed on the spot to enable the committee to carry out the objects of the meeting.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES AND PUNJAB.

Among the Christmas visitors to the capital of the North-West will probably be Sir Lepel Griffin, Sir Oliver St. John, and Colonel H. C. E. Ward from Bhopal.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West has returned to Allahabad. At Agra his Honour will hold a durbar, the first of a series of such gatherings to take place at the various divisional headquarters of the local Government during the winter.

The new Club at Simla is, it is believed, progressing apace; but up to the present moment the proceedings of the provisional committee have been kept a profound secret. The new Club will practically become in the future an Uncovenanted Service Club, though, like the Madras, Bengal, and Punjab Clubs, there will be no Service restrictions of any kind—anyone being eligible for membership provided he is not black balled. There has been some difficulty in obtaining a convenient and available site for the Club, and this difficulty—which is not lessened by the large number of men who have put down their names to join—has not yet been definitely settled. The Club is anxious to begin operations next season, and hence it is necessary to obtain some place which would house a considerable number of members; and this, as every one who knows Simla is aware, is not easily met with. Eventually, it is believed, the intention is to build a palatial Clubhouse on the hill at present occupied by the Simla Bank; but this project obviously cannot be carried out by next season.

In the Chief Court, Lahore, before Sir Meredith Plowden, Mr. Spitta appeared on behalf of the petitioner in the case of Buchanan v. Buchanan and Chadwick. A decree nisi was granted by the Chief Court on the 21st April last, dissolving the marriage between the petitioner, Surgeon-Major R. H. Buchanan, and the respondent, Sarah H. Buchanan, on the ground of her misconduct with the co-respondent, Chadwick. Mr. Spitta, on behalf of the petitioner, now moved the Court to make the said decree absolute, and to award to the petitioner the custody of the two infant children of the marriage. Mr. Cope, on behalf of the respondent, asked for access to the children to be allowed to the respondent, and that a provision in the shape of permanent alimony should be also granted. Sir M. Plowden made the decree absolute, finally dissolving the marriage of the parties, and awarded the custody of the children to Dr. Buchanan, with a stipulation for reasonable access being allowed to the respondent. The learned Judge further fixed the sum of Rs. 125 per mensem as permanent alimony for the respondent so long as she remained chaste and unmarried. An application on the part of the respondent to pay the marriage settlement of the parties was rejected by the Court.

NATIVE PRESS.

SEDITIOUS WRITING.

The Rast Goftar, writing under the above heading, says:—
The Times of India has done valuable public service by exposing an example of seditious writing from the Mahratti columns of the Native Opinion newspaper. We once had respect for this Anglo-Mahratti journal, but its partial writings have since greatly detracted from its merit. It accuses English officials of having two sets of teeth—one for grinding and another for mere display. But, as the Times of India has well pointed out, it is our Mahratti contemporary that has been doing something of the kind denoted in his illustration by employing two languages for the expression of its opinions. In its English columns it speaks in favour of the English, while its denunciations of the English have been published in its Mahratti columns, so that they may not know anything as to what is said about them.

The Kaisar-i-Hind says:— The Times of India has done good service by administering a dignified rebuke to Native Opinion for its article against the British Government. The Times of India has presented to the public a painful picture of some disaffected Native writers, whose misguided views have well been exposed by our contemporary. We shall be always glad to see impartial criticisms published on the faults and merits of the Native Press; but we, along with the respectable portion of the Press, take exception to the reference made in the leader of the Times to the Vernacular Press Act. The Times of India has justly acknowledged the fact that the respectable portion of the Press of this Presidency is conducted with moderation and good sense. The very fact of the Press having allowed the views expressed by Native Opinion to pass by in silence proves that there is no necessity whatever for the arrival of the Gagging Act.

TRAVELLED NATIVE PRINCES.—The Jam-e-Jamshed, speaking upon the travels of some of the princes of Kattywar in Europe and America, doubts whether the distinguished travellers receive all the benefits that one might expect them to derive from a visit to the land of western civilisation. Their time, the paper thinks, is too much occupied in receiving and returning hospitalities, to enable them to pay due attention to the trade, the resources and the modes of Government in the different countries which they visit. Rather than go so far afield, where there is always a fear of their contracting luxurious habits, they should only confine their travels to India, keeping their eyes open, and forming an intelligent appreciation of the things they see. The Jam-e strongly recommends such a tour for the students of the Rajkumar College during the vacation every cold season. At present the students generally spend their vacations in their own Native homes, where the evil influences by which they are often surrounded counteract the good that is done to them during their stay at the college.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.—The Jamee-Jamshed says:—The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has taken an important step, and we hope the public opinion of this Presidency, both Native and European, will support that body. It is unfortunate that the public have had no opportunity given them in this country for discussing the Budget. We agree with the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in its representations in favour of a free discussion of the financial policy of the Government. But we do not agree with that body in all that it has said in its memorial. For instance, the Chamber objects to the reduction of the Salt Tax, which, it ought to know, falls very heavily on the poorer classes of Natives. The Chamber, is, however, at one with the country in its demand that the Budget should be annually brought before the Supreme Legislative Council for discussion. It has been forcibly pointed out in the memorial that there have been Viceroys and Finance Ministers who have themselves been in favour of the reform, on the ground that if the people were taken into the confidence of the Government they would, in the event of a financial crisis or difficulty, be ready to evince their cordial sympathy with the Government.

In that responsible position he has cheerfully, and at great expenditure of time and money, performed responsible duties without receiving very active encouragement from the Government; and his resignation will be a severe loss to the two Batteries. He joined the Madras. Infantry Volunteers many years ago, and had attained the rank of Major sometime before he joined the Artillery Volunteers with the rank of Captain.

In his district order, dated the 17th Dec., the Brigadier-General Commanding, announces with regret the death of Colonel Stapleton Penny, R.A., who died the previous day at the European General Hospital of pneumonia. The deceased Colonel was buried with military honours at the Sewree Cemetery.

Ome for information regarding the copper mines in Nepai and in Upper Burma.

Travellers from Segowli, our military station, and Rathmandoo, the capital of Nepal, are assured that the hills south of the Rathmandoo Plain possess great quantities of copper; but the Nepalese are very jealous of European intrusion, and are not inclined to permit the construction of roads and canals, by means of which copper could be exported into Hindustan. India requires at least 10,000 tons of copper annually for the manufacture of cooking utensils.

Our information regarding the copper mines in Upper Burma is at present vague, but as that country now belongs to Great Britain, it is only necessary for the India Office to publish information in order to induce merchants to export copper by the Irrawaddy river. At present I believe there is a small importation of copper pots from China, so neglectful was the late Government in developing the resources of the country. Your obedient servant,

THE MYSORE GOLD MINING COMPANY (LIMITED).—This Company has received a telegram from Captain Plummer, dated Friday, giving last month's return of gold as follows: "1,500 tons of quartz from all parts of the Mine produced 1,241 ozs. of gold; also 56 ozs. obtained from tailings." It will be remembered that in the previous month (November) 1,500 tons of quartz from all parts of the mine produced 1,471 ozs. of gold, 60 ozs. also being obtained from tailings.

The Defalcations at Karachi.—It is notified in the Government Gazetts that the authority held by Mr. James Grant to act on behalf of the Bank of Bombay at Karachi has been cancelled. Mr. Hugh Fraser has succeeded Mr. Grant at Karachi, Mr. V. K. Kingcome being appointed to take charge of the Ahmedabad branch, and Mr. James Begbei of the Khangaum branch. The Sind Gazette refers as follows to the defalcations:—We are informed that the accounts and books of the Bank are all in perfect order; and in the cash reserve there is a sum of Rs. 75,000, represented only by a cheque for the amount drawn by the manager himself. To meet this there are no assets, and the deficit is admitted. There appears to be nothing further to be revealed. The only question that aggests itself is whether the matter may not resolve itself into one of debt only, to be the subject of a civil action. But we are sure there is not among our numerous readers one, who are sure there is not among our numerous readers one, who having known Mr. Grant, does not feel the keenest regard and pity at the incident which have o curred at the close of a career long, useful, and, until now, deemed irreproachable.

THE OPERATIONS IN BURMA.

It was very generally believed that with the death of Boh Shway the troubles with the dacoits in Upper Burma would cease. Later events, however, have shown that the belief was not well founded. The following from Mandalay, dated 14th Dec., shows that the country is still overrun by dacoits:—

A sad occurrence is reported from the Ava district. On 10th Dec. Mr. Rind, Inspector of Police, was returning to the Nizam post with a sergeant of police and a Burman servant, when he was attacked by dacoits. Mr. Rind and his servant were killed, and the sergeant escaped slightely wounded.

The advanced party of the Kalewa column, accompanied by Captain Raikes, Deputy Commissioner of the Chindwin, has started for Kalemyo. The Kale Tsawbwa is friendly, and some of the Chin headmen are coming in to meet Mr. Raikes. The fourth column for Yaw, namely, the one from Salin, has been detained to assist in the operations against Ottama. It was to start for Loungthe about the end of December.

CINCHONA PLANTATIONS IN INDIA.

CINCHONA PLANTATIONS IN INDIA.

The Cinchona plantations at Darjiling met with a serious loss in June, 1886, when a heavy downfall of rain caused a number of landslips by which no less than 300,000 cinchona trees, some of them among the best on the estate, were entirely destroyed. Fortunately there was but little loss of life. This was not the only loss sustained, for in the earlier part of the year a severe hailstorm destroyed 20,000 promising young trees. No extension of the area planted was made, but a large number of the red cinchona trees have been rooted up, and 389,000 calisaya trees and hybrids planted in their stead. These latter species yield excellent quinine, and it is hoped in a few years that none but the best species will be grown on the plantation. The bark produced is entirely used in the factory, where the demand is governed by the requisitions for febrifuge. In 1886, owing to the cheapness of quinine, the demand for the febrifuge had fallen off, and the crop of bark for the year was, therefore, only 225,631lbs. The harvesting of the bark cost a fraction over 5½ annas per pound, the cost on the Government plantations on the Nilgiris being a little over 10¾ annas per pound. The cost price of the material and of the preparing of it was Rs. 94,028, while the value of the febrifuge produced was Rs. 1,13,152. The sales of the febrifuge to the Medical Departments and the public amounted to 5,885lbs., which was a slight increase over the previous year, though not equal to that for the years 1881 to 1884. One of the causes of this is said to have been that the Medical De. though not equal to that for the years 1881 to 1884. One of the causes of this is said to have been that the Medical Departments had to work off the large stocks of English quinine partments had to work off the large stocks of English quinnesent by the Secretary of State four years ago. It is hoped that the present low price of quinine, which has been chiefly caused by the large exports of bark from Ceylon, where whole plantations of trees have been uprooted and their bark stripped off for sale to make room for tea plants, will soon end. The off for sale to make room for tea plants, will soon end. The export has amounted to fifteen million pounds annually for the last three years.

The death is announced of Deputy Surgeon-General Henry Martyn Fraser, M.D. Entering the Medical Department of the Army as assistant surgeon in 1849, he served throughout the Indian Mutiny, being present at the siege and capture of Lucknow.

The Survey of India has recently lost two good and able assistants, after long and valuable service in the Department—Mr. C. W. Coard, superintendent of engravers, and Mr. James Mackenzie, the head photographer. The Survey Office carries photography and its allied processes as far as has been done anywhere in practical work, and of the credit which is due for the perfection attained a share must belong to Mr. Mackenzie, who had been twenty-five years at the work. Mr. Coard was the maker of the engraving department, having been brought out in 1868 with a staff of assistants by General Thuillier to take up the work which had previously been done entirely in England. THE Survey of India has recently lost two good and able

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HITHERSEA MERE.*

Lady Augusta Noel is no ordinary woman; in her eyes love and matrimony are not the only things in life worth living for.

"Hithersea Mere" scarcely deals with those topics. Her characters seem rather indifferent to the seductive influences of the passions, and two volumes and a-half are hurried to their resting-place ere such a thing as a match is dreamt of. The novel is, in good truth, rather an attempt to analyse life by depicting in the form of a narrative the inner workings of a variety of personages. "Vanity, all is vanity," seems the key-note of this somewhat unusual effort to combine instruction and enlightenment. Not a character is placed before the reader but what the canker of disappointment eats away the reader but what the canker of disappointment eats away the bud of hope—not a person, young or old, but what feels some pangs which occasion searchings of heart. In one case it is a wife finding too late, when her husband is taken from her that she never understood him, never realised what he was to her and she to him. In another instance the daughter, charged to write the life of her father, a model man of piety, uprightness, and sterling integrity, finds, to her horror, that the angel whom she adores had passed through the fiery ordeal of scepticism, that withering blast that dries up the life-blood of so many a weary pilgrim in this land of sorrows. Sometimes a light-hearted daughter of Eve is rendered miserable because the cold, unimpassioned world have yet to learn the secret typified in the beautiful sentiment "love me, love my dog." Anon there is the yearning after the unsearchable, which fluds expression in the peal of the organ or the melancholy wail of one of the untempered instruments within the chamber of solitude. of solitude.

Then, now and again feelings of decency are shocked to learn that the chamber of death finds the living cold, unimpassioned, mercenary, and heartless beside the corpse of the dead; and the reader turns aside in disgust from scenes where the petty meannesses of human nature stand out in glaring bideougness, mocking as it was the pobler instincts of readers. the petty meannesses of human nature stand out in glaring hideousness, mocking, as it were, the nobler instincts of poor fallen man. Of course, there are exquisite traits of exquisite sweetness, but the general tone of this "study of life" is, as we have said, sad and melancholy. Lady Augusta Noel is a keen observer of what passes around her; she seems constantly on the watch to analyse motives and probe the actions of life to the quick. But her aims are pure and noble; she does not endeavour to destroy, but rather to build up, by showing that all which partakes of earth is earthy, that the rose always has a thorn. She strives to inculcate lessons of fervour and piety, leading her readers to reflect that happiness is not to be found in giddy gaiety, in stern infidelity, in placid indifference, but in plain, honest gentleness of soul, in guileless and unpretentious integrity. There is something very thoughtful and enticing in "Hithersea Mere," and it is refreshing to find originality, and turn aside from the beaten path of disappointed love and mismatched affections. path of disappointed love and mismatched affections.

HARMONIA.+

The author of "Harmonia" has taken a fresh line in the region of fiction, and laid the scene of his novel in a new Settlement in America. Of course, in these circumstances, he introduces his readers to the professional tout, always ready when selling land to proclaim that prices had just had a tremendous "boom," and equally prepared, when other people's property was in the market, to proclaim that hard times and bad seasons made it hopeless to realise high figures. Then there is the "parson" of the place, a mean-minded, half-educated individual, whose sole and solitary aim was to squeeze as much as possible out of his reluctant flock, and preach at them from the pulpit in the event of any shortcomings in the way of "donations." If the picture of "the voluntary system" be true to life—and there is no reason to suppose otherwise—it is greatly to be regretted that there are people in the world who would have it believed that the union of Church and State is an unmixed evil. mixed evil.

As might be supposed, the Settlement comprised a motley rew of different personages. First on the list is a Devonshire farmer, migrated to better himself; steady, sober—in fact, a teetotaller—he prospers, and leads a happy, contented life. His straightforward conduct, his wont to pray every morn and eve for the souls of those in a bad way, inspire that respect which is the due of sterling uprightness and utter respect which is the due of sterning aprignances and atter-absence of hypocrisy. Next comes an ex-clergyman of the Church of England forced by the voice of public opinion to quit his living, where for years he had laboured successfully, and with the approval of all with whom he came in contact. And why this banishment? Because he was supposed to have made away with some funds entrusted to him for parochial purposes. For a quarter of a century he lived a blameless, pious life, unmurmuring and without complaint; and not till the icy hand of sickness warned him of his approaching departure did he reveal the secret that his wife had purloined the cash to pay an unduly extravagant milliner's bill. But, perhaps, of all the "male" characters none will command so much admiration as the young "honourable"—the "fag-end" of a family of aristocratic children, whose extravagance the father's purse could not stand. Migrating to the New World, the youthful roue was fast on the road to ruin when a young maiden's charms brought him to his better self—led him to reflect as to his folly, and finally effected a complete reformation. The artless simplicity of this offshoot of English nobility, his freedom from vanity, his plain unpretentiousness, his sterling love for the girl of his choice—each and all place him upon a pedestal of admiration, which all will envy, but none will grudge. made away with some funds entrusted to him for parochial none will grudge.

Amongst the gentler sex there is the heroine of the story, a beautiful, open-hearted girl, who sacrifices everything to marry the man she worshipped. A charming wife, she was blessed with a charming husband; each was perfect in the eyes of the other, each trusted the other, and, as a result, happiness and contentment reigned supreme amidst but little of this world's goods to minister to the wants or the pleasures of worldly evictore. existence existence.

The artless maiden, who, as aforesaid, was wooed and won by the young "honourable" of the Settlement, was the embodiment of all that is lovable and lovely. She deserves to live for ever in the pages of fiction. The parson's wife was, like himself, worldly-minded, grovelling, querulous, and embittered. Other characters there are interesting, and all drawn with a master-hand. It is seldom the lot of the reviewer to pass unstinted commendation, but on this occasion there is absolutely nothing to be written in dispraise of this most masterly novel—the interest never flags, the scenes are not only full of life and novelty, but replete with instruction. "Harmonia" is a gem of the season. is a gem of the season.

The Century Magazine for January contains a very good article on the Catacombs of Rome, and a singularly able criticism on Ruskin. The "Elk-Hunt on the Plains" will interest those addicted to sport; but the other articles are not particularly attractive to an English reader.

The Art Journal for January contains an exquisite etching of Orchardson's celebrated and magnificent picture "Hard Hit." There is also some very interesting notes on "Japan and its Art Wares," and some attractive illustrations of "Gray's Inn."

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for January contains a number of papers on various professional subjects, amongst which may be specially mentioned that on the Nordenfeldt Submarine boats, on Russian Novelties, and on the Trans-Caspian Railway, by C. J. L'Estrange. There is an exhaustive paper giving the history, with illustrations of military and naval medals, besides an account with adopted frontieries of the most eminent Order of the with illustrations of military and naval medals, besides an account with coloured frontispiece of the most eminent Order of the Indian Empire; the Distinguished Service Order; and the Order of the Crown of India. Mr. Vandam concludes the letters which he has pleasantly edited "From a French Dragoom to an English Journalist," and Admiral Winning-Ingram contributes some extracts from his journal while commanding H.M.S. Argus on the coast of Sicily in 1860. We miss, however, the usual notice of some one of our Military Stations in India—a series of papers which were looked forward to by military readers.

The illustrations fully sustain the reputation which they have already achieved.

Books for Review.—"Neo-Hellenic Manual," by Rev. Anton Tien (W. H. Allen and Co.).

THE London Spectator has managed to get alarmed about the extinction of the elephant—a consummation which it believes that persons now living may very probably witness. believes that persons now living may very probably witness. The wild herds of Africa are being reduced with melancholy rapidity—which is perfectly true—by the demands of the ivory trade, and though the tuskless variety of Ceylon remains Ceylon is small, and the demand for tame elephants large. As the elephant rarely breeds in captivity, the conclusion is that "within no long period of time the species will altogether cease to exist." One would have thought that a writer who sets himself to discuss a special subject like this in the solemn Spectator might have been expected to know that there is yet another home of the wild elephant neither exposed to the ivory hunter nor limited in extent—the continent of India.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 9, 1888.

THE BENGALI PRESS AND ENGLISH OFFICIALS.

THE Amrita Bazar Patrika, which is printed in English in Calcutta, and is supposed to have a considerable influence amongst educated Natives, has of late been indulging in the most scurrilous abuse of English officials in India. It has been directing a persistent attack, chiefly against Sir Lepel Griffin, but there are several officers in responsible positions who also come in for abuse in no measured terms. The Editor formulates some fifteen charges against Sir Lepel, the first of which is that he persuaded Sir Gunput Rao to invest three crores of Scindia's money in Government Securities, and the last that he sent a commanding telegram from Simla ordering the Mahommedan State of Bhopal to pay for a Christian church and Christian chaplains. Between these charges lie accusations of high-handed proceedings, intrigue, deception of the Viceroy, and bullying of the Begum. It has been said that Sir Lepel asked permission of the Viceroy to defend himself against the charges thus made, either judicially or through the Press, but that his request was refused. Whether this be so or not, he is fortunately able to take care of his own reputation, and the speech which he lately made at Indore shows that he thoroughly understands the character of his Bengali traducers. It may not, perhaps, have been the most judicious act for an officer in his high position to do to stir up the passions of Rajputs, Sikhs, and Mahomedans against the Bengalis; but the vigorous language which he used contained only truths which the Government of India pretends not to recognise in its foolish petting of the spoilt Babú. And if that Government continues to be indifferent to the attacks continually made in the Native papers against Government officials, it cannot be surprised if now and then one of those officials takes sufficient courage to himself to speak out his mind, as Sir Lepel Griffin has done. Some check ought surely to be available to protect the servants of the Government from continued and wanton insult in the execution of their duties. The Paramount Power would not interfere with the liberty of the Press in permitting an official who was libelled to sue his. detractor in a court of law. Fine and imprisonment are methods of restraint which the "high class classical" Babú scribblers of the Press have a wholesome dread ofand a little experience of which would go far towards mending their manners in type. Even the Statesman, which, though under English editorship, is an admirer of the Babu, and an upholder of his political aspirations, confesses that India is the first example of a purely despotic Government challenging freedom of speech upon all it-does or forbears doing. "The world has never before a great and powerful despotism administered side by side with a free Press, and with thean almost gratuitous University educaof tion for all who aspire thereto. It is a problem, the conditions of which were never before imagined, and its solution cannot be anticipated." This is all very true; the problem is a complex one, but liberty of the Press does not even in free England embrace all immunity from the consequences of slander, libel, andbearing false witness. The disreputable portion of the Native Press of Bengal has license to indulge in this way provided that the slandered and maligned are English. officials. But not only is personal malice and spite permitted to flourish, but seditious writing is amiably winked at, and thereby encouraged. In one column of the Amrita Bazar Patrika of December 8th we read: "The Politicals have made the lives of the Native Princes. miserable, and therefore if any disturbance were to happen. here it is doubtful whether all of the Native Princes of India, from Nepal to Hyderabad, will leave everything they consider dear, and join the standard of the British Government as they did at the time of Lord Canning."

This is a plain enough hint to disloyalty in all conscience. In another column of the same paper its readers. are told that the people are hunted like wild animals by the police whose oppressions are taken no notice of, thatthe "most convicting" magistrate is the pet of the-Government, and that the Indian Criminal Procedure Code is "a bloody law." But whilst the Amrita Bazar Patrika boasts that it "has taken the noble task in hand of exposing the high-handedness of some of the Anglo-Indian officials who consider the Natives-rich or poor, high or low-their legitimate prey, and ruthlessly fall upon them whenever they get any opportunity," it quotes from another Native paper what would happen if Government prosecuted the Editor. The Dacca Gazette says :-"We would be no false prophet if we were to say herethat as soon as the news spreads throughout the country that the Editor of the Amrita Bazar is in trouble the whole country from Peshawur to Assam, from Himalaya to Comorin, will rise to one man to help him, and send forth a growl that will shake the throne of the Queen-Mother, and make her look attentively into the affairs of

After the reading of this terrible threat one must pause for breath. Can it be from fear of this threatened vengeance that the Government of India has hitherto declined to allow even a gentle prosecution of Babú Shishir Kumar, the amiable editor? The Babu says, in one of his leader paragraphs, that "prisons should not be places for punishment, but reformation, and that Indian prisoners deserve some consideration." Certainly the Bal u does, and the sooner he gets it the better.

Some statements which have been quoted by the Pioneer regarding Dr. G. W. Leitner's retirement from the Educational Department of the Punjab are, we are assured, incorrect and misleading. We are informed that the facts are that Dr. Leitner was given the option by the Secretary of State either to return to Indian Service or to accept a bonus in addition to pension. He has elected to do the latter, and has taken a bonus of £1,500 in addition to a pension of Rs. 5,000 a year, the Secretary of State pre-ferring this arrangement rather than charge the revenues of India with Rs. 7,500 per annum, which was the amount of the special pension for which he was recommended by the Government of the Punjab and the Government of India in recognition of the services which he had rendered to the cause of education in the Punjab.

THE SUEZ CANAL ROUTE TO THE EAST IN WAR TIME.

Admiral Elliot writes to the Morning Post as follows: -In a formes letter I argued thas the strategical advantages which the control of the Suez Canal would give to a belligerent would so vitally affect the issues of a war that the power of securing that control was a matter of paramount necessity for the defence of our Empire, and from the inquiries I have made I feel assured that these contentions are strongly upheld by the naval service at large. It therefore appears incredible that such a manifestation of professional opinion on a purely technical point of efficiency to meet the exigencies of war should be disregarded by our rulers, unless they can defend this apparent imprudence by satisfacour rulers, unless they can defend this apparent imprudence by satisfactory explanations. In support of my arguments for a more powerful fleet I would quote the words of two of our most eminent Cabinet Ministers. Lord Salisbury, at Derby, on the 19th Dec., said—"If the thunder-clap of war should break, it will give you no warning; and if by untoward chance you should be involved in it, your fate will depend upon the preparations you have made in time of peace." The Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, at Manchester, on the 14th Dec., said:—"Economy is a great virtue; but if the economy be the result of neglecting to carry out works of great public interest and utility, then it is a virtue of which we may easily have too much." No works can be of greater public interest than such as are essential to the safety of our Empire. I need only point to the readiness with which people submit to be taxed for local improvements, and contrast that enormous outlay with I need only point to the readiness with which people submit to be taxed for local improvements, and contrast that enormous outlay with the constraint which is put on every demand for making adequate provision for our national defence. The Admiralty is not asked for a "plan of campaign," but with regard to the adequacy of the fleet to secure for our warships the use of the Suez Canal in our time, they cannot be allowed to hide their candle under a bushel. What is wanted is a plain answer, no disguise instigated by political expediency, no halting between two stools, no cant about economy; in a matter of such vital importance there should be no concealment to the nation. They may twist and turn over the difficulty of the Suez Canal in relation to the strategic position of the difficulty of the Suez Canal in relation to the strategic position of the French ports as they like; but there is no escape from the meshes except by the creation of a stronger navy, which is an immediate necessity. To remain as we are is to fly in the face of all human experience, and when Parliament meets and the Navy Estimates are laid. before a Select Committee of the House of Commons it is to be hoped before a Select Committee of the House of Commons it is to be hoped that the scrutiny will not be limited, and that professional opinion will be largely consulted, not only to ascertain where money is wasted, but as to the character of our armaments, and whether the fleet is sufficiently numerous to insure the safety of our empire. There has been no greater waste of money than on faulty designs for ships-of-war, owing entirely to the want of a wider scope of consultation; and should our navy, through weakness, be overpowered in the hour of greatest need, it may prove more ruinous to this nation than the defeat of the French army at Sedau.

THE INDO-CHINESE TARIFF.

The Board of Trade Journal, says a despatch, dated Oct. 11 last, has been received from Mr. E. H. Egerton, Her Majesty's Minister at Paris, enclosing copy of a memorandum prepared by Mr. J. A. Crowe, Her Majesty's Commercial Attaché for Europe, respecting a letter addressed by the Singapore Chamber of Commerce to the London Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the differential duties imposed in French Cochin-China, and of the action of the French Government in imposing the same. The following is an extract from the memorandum in question: memorandum in question :-

The Chamber of Commerce of Singapore drew up its report of complaints on Aug. 10, nearly one month before a decree was issued in Paris for the purpose of levying exceptional duties on certain articles imported into French Indo-China. The tariff appended to the decree of Sept. 8 does not comprise cottons, respecting which the Chamber of Commerce of Singapore has found most reason to protest. Chamber of Commerce of Singapore has found most reason to protest. It might have been thought that when the French Parliament enacted that certain articles should be subjected to exceptional duties in Indo-China, the object of this enactment would have been to remove burdens and not to increase taxation. A glance at the table which I annex will show the rates charged by the French general tariff and the tariff of Indo-China, and make it clear that the latter is much more protective than the former in a great majority of cases. It will be seen that ninety-six articles which are free in the French general tariff are charged with duty in Indo-China, and that rice is one of these articles.

"The only things which the French are inclined to tax less in Saigon than in France are salt and dried fish, coffee, cloves and cardamoms, nutmegs and mace, tobacco, mineral oils, and Chinese paper, books, leather trunks, and boots and shoes. Matches, which are a books, leather trunks, and boots and shoes. Matches, which are a monopoly in France, are burdened with a prohibitive duty, and sugar which is allowed to enter France, is prohibited altogether in Indo-China. Opium from British India is heavily handicapped, whilst special favour is extended to the opium of Yunnan.

special favour is extended to the opium of Yunnan.

"But it is not of these items that the Chamber of Commerce of Singapore complain. The Chamber asks that we should make representations to protest against the duties on grey and other cottons, respecting which they declare 'that neither from the dimensions, weight, nor value of the goods, is it possible to discover the principle on which they are taxed.' Unfortunately these remarks apply not only to the tariff of Indo-China, but to the tariff of France. Both tax cottons by weight, surface, and number of threads, and if an analysis of the Saigon duties in cotton 'supers' shows the incidence of duty to be identical in the cases of goods of different price, the same observation applies to similar goods imported into France. In France, however, the conventional tariff is less high than the normal in Saigon. What there is subject to a duty of f.62, would pay at Boulogne or Calais but f.50. What there is chargeable with f.95, would have but f.60 to bear in France.

"The aim of the French Government is to alter the current of business, and, if possible, to turn it into French channels. that the mercantile community of Saigon is not favourable to this mode of proceeding, and they have, on that account, taken measures to exclude the French Indo-Chinese merchant from any voice in the establishment of Customs or octroi duties. I have before me copies of a degree of Oct. 6, which appeared in the Journal Official of the 9th inst. (October), from which it appears not only that the constitution of the Colonial Council of Cochin-China is to be reformed so as to exclude all contractors or persons receiving pay from the Colonial budget, but that the body so reformed is forbidden to deliberate on any question of customs or octroi duties. The Chamber of Commerce of Singapore say they have reason to believe that the French merchants at Saigon are themselves opposed to the heavy duties recently imposed. The decree which I have just quoted confirms this impression, but shows that the French Government are disposed to follow their commercial policy in spite of them."

THE SILVER QUESTION.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

A telegram from New York says:—Mr. Atkinson, who recently went to Europe to investigate the question of bi-metallism, reports that there is no prospect of any change at present in the monetary system of the European states which can modify or influence the financial policy of the United States, and expresses the opinion that it would be unwise and inexpedient for America to again take the initiative in promoting action with a view to the general adoption of a bi-metallic legal tender coupled with free coinage of silver, for the reason that such action might be misconstrued, and might tend to retard rather than promote the object aimed at. The possibility, continues Mr. Atkinson, of a bi-metallic treaty without the concurrence of Great Britain has been suggested, but there is apparently no prospect of its consideration even in Germany, and very little elsewhere. At every point and by the representatives of every phase of opinion on the Continent he was assured that the continuance of the present status or the future adoption of bimetallism virtually rested upon the action of Great Britain. These opinions, however, are not based upon any official statement made by any Government officer. Bimetallism had not yet become a live question of any gr. at Parliamentary or political importance in Great Britain. Public opinion would cause no change in the position of Great Britain, and consequently of Europe, for a long time to come.

The remarks of the United States Secretary to the Treasury on the silver coinage question, contained in his annual report, just issued, show that the recent increased circulation of the silver dollars and the certificates representing them has not blinded the Treasury authorities to the anomalous position in which it is placed under the Bland Act. He suggests that the law be so amended as to authorise the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates against the coining value of the bullion bought and to coin only such number of dollars as he may deem expedient hereaft expedient hereafter. He insists also upon the need of making provision against a time when there may be more of this form of money than is required for the business of the country. All silver held by the Treasury in excess of the amount held against outstanding silver certifices and at a additional amount sufficient to enable the Government to supply and demand for it on the part of the people is, the Secretary declares, useless for any purpose, and a menace to the silver held by the people, and, indeed, to the whole circulating medium except gold, and he advises that a measure be adopted to prevent any accumulation of silver in the Treasury beyond such a reserve as that indicated. This could be done by fixing the amount of such reserve and providing that when it is exceeded by, say, 5,000,000 dollars, the purchase of bullion shall cease until the amount held by the Government again equals such reserve.

The Victory, renowned as the flagship of Nelson at the battle of Trafalgar, has undergone a careful examination in dock, with the result that the old historical craft was found, in spite of her great age and lengthy services, to be in a really marvellous state of preservation. The leak which some time since threatened to sink her does not appear to have been so explaint as was found, leaving no doubt that appear to have been so serious as was feared, leaving no doubt that the weather beaten man-of-war will shortly be able to return to her old moorings in Portsmouth Harbour.

Captain Wilmot Hawksworth Fawkes, R.N., who goes out to the Cape Station as Flag-Captain to Rear Admiral Wells, is second son of Major Richard Fawkes, late 27th Inniskilling Fusiliers. He served as a midshipman in the Liverpool, and in the same capacity was appointed, in September, 1863, to the Scylla, corvette, with which he served for over three years under Captain Courtenay, on the China Station. He was there promoted to be a sub-lieutenancy and transferred to the flagship Princess Royal, February, 1867, and in November following, after his return home, obtained his lieutenant's commission.

Forestier Walker, C.B., C.M.G., commanding 2nd Battalion Scots Guards, who has been specially selected for promotion to the rank of major-general, entered the Scots Fusilier Guards in 1862. He served in the Kaffir and Zulu Campaigns, 1878-9; was present at the battle of Inyezane and at the occupation of Etshowe; was twice mentioned in despatches, and received the medal with clasp and C.B. He also took part in the Bechuanaland Expedition of 1884-5, for which he was granted the C.M.G. Colonel Walker is only forty-three years of age, and will be the youngest major-general in the army.

PRINCELY PHILANTHROPY IN INDIA.

The Maharajah of Darbhanga, in Bengal, has established a hospital and dispensary for female patients near his ancestral seat in the district of Darbhanga, Behar, and is erecting new quarters for its accommodation at a cost of Rs.55,000, in connection with Lady Dufferin's Medical Aid for Women Fund. This announcement reached England by the last mail; and to those who can remember India as it was some twenty or thirty years ago this novel form of benefaction will serve as a striking reminder of the great social changes that have taken place in that country during the period that India has been "the India of the Queen." It is also one of many illustrations that recent mails have brought home of the firm hold that the movement for medical aid to the women of India, inaugurated by the Countess of Dufferin, and specially encouraged by Her Majesty the Queen, has taken on the imagination and the sympathies of the Princes and people of India. But probably very few persons in this country, even of those who have had dealings with India, will be aware that this liberal and enlightened gift is only the latest, and one of the least considerable, of a long series of philanthropic acts on the part of this great Hindoo noble, which have been on a scale of magnificence heardly even equalled hardly ever equalled.

The Maharajah of Darbhanga, who is at once a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire and a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, is one of the premier nobles of British India. He is the head of a princely Hindoo family that became eminent under the benign rule of the Great Mogul, Akbar, and is said to have received the "Raj" or prin-Mogul, Akbar, and is said to have received the "Raj" or principality of Darbhanga from the favour of that potentate. The earliest "Sanad"—or patent conferring the Raj—that is now extant at the Palace in Darbhanga was given by the Mogul Emperor Farrukhsiyar. Not many of the great houses of Bengal survived the disasters of the early years of Lord Cornwallis's "Permanent Settlement" of the revenues of Bengal; but the immense possessions of the Darbhanga family enabled it to tide over those years of difficulty, and it has consequently enjoyed the full benefit of later years of prosperity. An interesting chapter in Sir William Hunter's "Statistical Account of Bengal" is devoted to the history of this principality, from which it appears that more than half-a-million sterling had been saved during the minority of the present Maharajah by the British officials placed in charge of the Raj by the Court of Wards; but of these savings no less a sum than £300,000 was expended on charitable relief and relief works during the terrible famine of 1873-74—six years before the Maharajah was expended on charitable relief and relief works during the terrible famine of 1873-74—six years before the Maharajah came of age. The revenues of the Rajat present are something over £200,000 per annum; and the Maharajah pays nearly £50,000 a year to Government as his revenue assessment or land-tax. In 1685 the revenues derived by the Raj from the district of Tirhoot alone amounted to £79,000; and the principality also extends over large portions of the districts of Monghyr, Purniah, and Bhagalpur—the Purniah estates having been granted by the Mogul Emperor Shah Alam in 1776. Besides the half-million sterling of savings during the recent minority, from 1860-1879, debt was paid off to the amount of 70 lakhs, or about another half-million sterling.

It may be assumed that the Maharajah had not much 70 lakhs, or about another half-million sterling.

It may be assumed that the Maharajah had not much authority during his minority in the matter of the contribution of £300,000 to charitable relief. But since his coming-of-age, in 1879, the published accounts of the Raj show that he has expended in similar philanthropic works and charity a further sum of about £340,000. The Female Hospital just opened, which forms the Maharajah's contribution to the Countess of Dufferin's Jubilee Memorial, is the third hospital actually built and endowed by him on the Raj: hesides which actually built and endowed by him on the Raj; besides which he has constructed and maintains no fewer than twenty-three schools, of which one is an "Anglo-vernacular" or higher-class school. He also contributes largely to the cost of three dispensaries, twenty-three village schools or "pathsalas," and four other schools. He has opened 150 miles of new roads, and planted 20,000 trees on these roads. The irrigation works he has executed in the Monghyr district alone have cost about he has executed in the Monghyr district alone have cost about £70,000.

Besides this noble contribution to the Countess of Dufferin's Jubilee Fund, the Maharajah has contributed about a lakh of rupees to other memorials of Her Majesty's Jubilee. a lakh of rupees to other memorials of Her Majesty's Jubilee. For instance, the Raj servants, Pandits, and other dependents, got more than Rs. 30,000 distributed among them to give them a joyful remembrance of the occasion. And when Her Majesty conferred on him the Knight Commandership of the Most Eminent Order of the Indian Empire the Maharajah's loyal gratitude took a similar benevolent form; he remitted one-eighth of the year's rental to all his tenants—a remission amounting to nearly £30,000, and likely to cause great rejoicings in many hundreds of homes. And this most liberal gift came on the top of two of the most extraordinary remissions of rent ever granted by any landlord in any country; for in 1882 the Maharajah by a stroke of the pen cancelled all arrears due to him throughout the principality, amounting to no less a sum than £185,253 10s.; and in panty, amounting to no less a sum than £185,283 108.; and in 1885 he similarly cancelled a large proportion of the rents due to him, amounting to £53,977 12s. When asked, as a pious Hindoo, to subscribe to the Benares drainage works he put down a contribution of a lakh of rupees (£10,000).

The Maharajah is a good and fluent speaker in English, and was appointed by Lord Ripon to a seat in the Legislative Council of India. He has received at Darbhanga at various times State visits both from the present Viceroy and from the Council of India. He has received at Darbhanga at various times State visits both from the present Viceroy and from the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal; and, as his estates march with the boundless jungles of the Nepal Terai for a great many miles, the Maharajah is at all times able to show his guests some of the finest sport to be had in India. He was guests some of the finest sport to be had in India. He was reappointed to the Legislative Council by Lord Dufferin, who has more than once spoken publicly in very strong terms of his remarkable liberality and public spirit. He is also a Fel-low of the Calcutta University, and the most prominent patron of Sanscrit and English learning in Bengal.

OUR MADRASSEES.

"The timorous and easily alarmed nature of the Madrassee Sepoy."—One of our Prominent Papers.

I regret to say that it has been for some time the fashion to talk in a disparaging manner of the soldiers of the Madras Army—the premier army of India, let me remind my readers—and the only cause for this industriously circulated slander —and the only cause for this industriously circulated slander appears to be a jealousy that after the mutiny sprung up in the northern Presidency against her more loyal sister of the south. "Our Madrassees," under Clive, gave us India, and later on in a time of terrible suspense stood true to their salt, and saved us, if not our Empire, at least an infinitely more sanguine struggle for the supremacy. I am open to correction, but to the best of my memory the soldiers of Madras were not even represented at the recent National Jubilee. How England's Clive, and Ireland's Wellington, and Scotland's tough old "Davey" Baird would have exclaimed, "And where are our men!"

Who were those that fought at Plassey—held the balance of the fray, Gave us India in the evening as the earnest of the day; Later, turned the tide of victory, when it faltered at Assaye? Who were they, that brave three hundred, whose devotion un-

In my heart at least remembered; stern through lightning, storm and shot Followed Clive, and ere the morning crowned the ramparts of Arcot?

And upon the following midnight, far outnumbered, fought, prevailed, Stood the siege, flung back ten thousand, tamed the Frenchmen who assailed, Those three hundred, ah; two hundred now, but was there man that failed?

Fifty days they held in leaguer, rice was all that did remain, "It suffices us rice-water, give your Englishmen the grain," "They require support, O Colonel Clive! but we can stand the strain.

Tell me, you who read our histories, where devotion more than this

Then that night of fierce assailants, musket rattle, rocket hiss Warriors drunk with bang and reckless as fanaticism is.

Onset after desperate onset, each repulsed and backwards hurled

And the hours of anxious waiting, till the morning mists up curled Showed the empty tents, abandoned baggage, guns, and standards furled.

Aye, from that day on to this one never where the English led Have those steady soldiers faltered; needless here to write in

All the fields whereon the children of the Southern State have

I, who late have left my boyhood, I, whose childish years begun

In your land of palm and temple, in your South beneath the sun.

Cannot hear you vilely libelled and not meet the charge for J. C. GRANT.

-From Vauclin and other Verses.

Instructions have been issued for the Pelican, 8, composite aloop, 1,180 tons, 1,060-horse power, Commander Richard W. Hope, serving on the Pacific station, to return to England to be paid out of commission. The Pelican, which hoisted the pennant on April 3, 1884, is to be relieved on the Pacific station by the Espiegle, 10, composite sloop, 1,180 tons, 1,140-horse power, which was commissioned in August last by Commander Arthur C. THE Pioneer says of Sir Lepel Griffin's speech addressed to the The Pioneer says of Sir Lepel Griffin's speech addressed to the Gwalior Darbar and people, when laying the foundation-stone of a Public Library and Museum at Lashkar:—"The speech is amusing, audacious, characteristic. One may differ from Sir Lepel Griffin's views occasionally, but his almost reckless courage in expressing them is refreshing. On this occasion we agree with almost everything he says, especially in his opinion of 'representative institutions,' which are, he tells his audience, 'as much suited to India as to the moon.' Then he calls the National Congress a sham. And a sham it is.' National Congress a sham. And a sham it is.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monritur (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compondium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. They folice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian occibe.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views sot forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus projet before the English public are characterised by a zouwledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time boing set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is haped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public iff Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects

In the course of a hundred pages clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENEUM

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be o the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, atudents, and morchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far no for Indian literature than anything I have writt nunder my own name—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sone from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims,—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 30th December; from Allahabad and Madras. to the 28th December; and from Calcutta to the 27th December.

THE Viceroy's Levée on the night of the 20th December is said to have been one of the largest ever held in Calcutta. Lady Dufferin's first Drawing Room this season was also very largely attended.

THE Commander-in-Chief has arrived at Calcutta.

Sir Auckland Colvin has gone to Lucknow, where he intends to stay about six weeks.

SIE CHARLES AITCHISON was so far recovered from the effect of his recent attack of fever as to have been able to attend the Levée in Calcutta.

SIR CHARLES TURNER has taken his passage home by the steamer of the 6th January from Bombay. The labours of the Public Service Commission have come to an end, and all the members are leaving Calcutta.

THE Governor of Bombay turned the first sod of the Gondal-Porebunder Railway extension line on Dec. 29th, and in an address to the people said the Viceroy authorised him to say that hereafter Gondal will rank as a first-class State, and that the Thakore will have a salute of 11 guns.

THE proceedings of the National Congress commenced at Madras on December 27th. Mr. Budroodin Tyabjee was appointed chairman. In the course of his inaugural address he referred to the attitude of the Mahomedans, and urged that educated Natives should be the leaders of public opinion in India.

It is reported from Nepal that the relatives of Ranbir Jung, with a force of four thousand men, have attacked and seized Jaileswan and Kutcherry.

KANDAHAR news states that all the Ameer's spare troops in Southern Afghanistan have been ordered up to the Ghazni district, but the object of the movement is not

THE Bengal National Chamber of Commerce has submitted a memorial to Government on the Mint question. It considers that little, if any, saving could be effected by the abolition of the Calcutta Mint, and urges that it is doubtful whether the Bombay Mint as at present constituted would be able to supply the whole country with coined rupees.

THE accounts of cholera from Poona are of a serious character. The visitation is said to be peculiarly virulent, and in some localities 70 per cent. of the attacked have succumbed.

Mr. Petre, First Assistant to the Agent, Governor-General, Indore, goes home in February, and will be succeeded by Mr. Fitzgerald, formerly First Assistant to the Resident of Hyderabad.

BILKIS JAHAN, the favourite granddaughter of her Highness the Begum of Bhopal, died on Dec. 23.

THE Government of India has declined to assent to the proposal of the Eastern Bengal Railway to construct a branch line to the Petroleum Depôt at Budge-Budge. The Calcutta Port Trnst has asked that the matter may be reconsidered.

It is stated that the railway-station being built by the Russians at Bokhara will be completed in six months.

A PARTY of Tribal Maliks from the Kyber will probably visit Calcutta before long.

A DUEL has been fought in the Khan of Khelat's camp near Sibi between members of two families between whom some feud existed.

News from Burma states that the expedition to the Southern Shans has reached Mokmoi.

THE expedition to the Chins under Captain Raikes has reached Kalaimyo. A reconnaissance will be made from Kalaimyo to Chittagong.

Affairs generally in Burma are reported as being fairly quiet, although a few minor dacoities have occurred.

In Meiktala some twenty dacoits with twelve guns have surrendered during the week.

THE HON. Mr. Scorell, being unable to visit Rangoon as he intended, the Burma Courts Bill will probably stand over for some time.

An archeological department has been established at Mysore for a period of three years certain under Mr. Lewis Rice, Education Secretary.

THE pearl fishery operations at Silavatturnai in Coylon commence on or about February 15.

THE exceptional honour of a salute of uine guns in-British territory has been granted to Raja Sir Gunpat-Rao Khudkey, K.C.S.I., president of the Gwalior Council of Regency, in recognition of his energetic and wise administration of the Gwalior State.

Mr. H. J. H. Fasson, of the Bengal Civil Service, has committed suicide by blowing his brains out.

LORD WILLIAM BERESFORD'S Myall King has won the Viceroy's cup at the Calcutta races.

A verdict of wilful murder has been returned by the coroner's jury against a Pathan in connection with the death of a Mahomedan woman whose body was found in a box at Parel.

An Archæological Department has been established in Mysore.

It is proposed to make over the Bangalore Fort to the Mysore State.

The sittings of the National Congress in Madras commenced on the 27th December.

Mr. Dosahboy France, C.S.I., retired from his post of Second Presidency Magistrate on the 1st January.

OBITUARY .-- Nawab Sir Ikbal-ud-Dowla, of the Oudh family; Bilkis Jahan, the favourite granddaughter of the Begum of Bhopal.

From reports published in the Ceylon papers it appears that Captain Donnan, the Superintendent of the Pearl Fisheries, has found that there are about 160,000,000 oysters on the Cheval Par, though of this number some sixty millions are too young for fishing next season. The sample oysters washed from this lot were valued at only Rs. 650 per thousand, but those from other parts of the bank were valued at an average of Rs. 17 per thousand. Captain Donnan has discovered a new bed of oysters: it contains some 30 million oysters about three years old, and is situated on the Mulluvarulu Par, off Dutch Bay. The west side of Cheval par and the east side of the Periya Par are also covered with oysters three months old. Captain Donnan wishes to commence the next fishing in February. February.

NOTES.

THE news from India to-day continues to be of the same quiet, uneventful nature which we have lately been recording. What the Times correspondent has wired will be found in another column; it is little better than what is the same of the same o is known to journalists as "padding," but the papers to hand by the Overland Mail do not help us to much better The chief intelligence seems to be that there is nothing particular to record.

THE so-called National Congress at Madras promises to end, as it began, in talk. No definite action is likely to follow. A foolish fear seems to have existed in some quarters that a number of Mahomedan Delegates would be present, and that some serious questions regarding our relations with our Indian Mussulmans would be discussed —the Hindus fanning, if they could, any flames of sedition which might possibly be kindled. But nothing of the kind has occurred. The Mahomedans of India wisely determine not to make common cause for evil purposes with the locuscious but non-fighting Babús. The foldetermine not to make common cause for evil purposes with the loquacious but non-fighting Babús. The followers of the Prophet may have ugly ways of advancing their tenets or aspirations, but at all events they have the courage of their opinions. They are not, we are glad to say, on the side of the Babú. Whether they have accepted Sir Lepel Griffin's "injudicious" advice we know not, but it is very satisfactory to know that they have not disregarded it.

SIR LEPEL is expected in England in April next, and he is young enough still to make a great future for himself here. No Indian official has been more misunderstood (by those who did not know him) than he has been. His habit of answering fools according to their folly, or not answering them at all, although based on the recommendation of King Solomon, has perhaps not contributed to his popularity amongst that class of which Carlyle says the majority of mankind are composed, but this will not hamper him in England when he is free from the trammels of officialism. Those who know him know the strength which is in him, and are convinced that he will make an honeurable mark in the history of these times if life be spared him.

THE appointment of Sir Alfred Lyall to the India Council, in succession to Sir Robert Montgomery, will meet with general approval throughout India, even in circles where Sir Alfred was not popular. Those circles need not be taken into much consideration, for they were composed chiefly of those to whom Carlyle's remark refers. Sir Alfred Lyall is a strong man—with the courage of his convictions, and possessing the skill and determination of being able to hold his own in spite of contending elements. His presence in the India Council Chamber means not only new blood, but new, strong blood into a body which will be none the worse for the infusion.

Some of our contemporaries are wondering why Mr. Edwin Arnold should have been knighted, and Mr. Levi Lawson remain untitled. We think that Mr. Lawson has considerable political claims which his party ought to recognise, but the honour bestowed on Mr. Edwin Arnold is out of the sphere of politics, and one which must be approved of by all scholars, and by all Anglo-Indians. His name is a household word throughout India, for no Englishman has done more to bring the Natives of that country—their joys and sorrows—the story of their lives, great or humble—into sympathy with English readers than he has. Whatever Oriental topic he has touched he than ne has. Whatever Oriental topic he has touched he has not only adorned with his poetic genius, but he has given to it a warmth and geniality which appeal direct to the heart.

PHIL ROBINSON, in referring to the man, says of him: "He is a statesman, a scholar, and a poet, and has deserved well not only of Britain, but of India. Yet, oddly enough, well known as 'the Light of Asia' is, how many know him by sight? He has never been photographed. Here is a chance for the speculative itinerant with his instantaneous' process. I once saw a war artist take a snap with his camera at an Arab as he came by full swing, and the desert man dropped incontinently off his camel, thinking he must be at least shot dead by such a murderous weapon. If any one tries it on with Sir Edwin Arnold the sombrero will come down with a sudden slouch, and all the photographer will get will be a fine three-quarter view of an umbrageous soft black felt hat.'

THE Pioneer says that in connection with the recent Punjab University scandals a formal Commission of Inquiry under the statute is being issued to examine into the charges against Mr. F. Larpent, the late Registrar. The President will be a judicial officer selected from the North-West Provinces, and the other members probably a senior officer of the enrolled list of the Financial Department and a Punjab officer of standing. The Commission will report to the Government of India.

SIXTY-THREE vessels passed through the Suez Canal in November with the aid of the electric light. The P. and O. Since then, however, on Dec. 12, the Russian merchantman Moskwa has made the quickest passage ever known—in 14½ hours, chiefly by night. The Bitter lakes were passed at the rate of fifteen miles an hour, the speed in the rest of the Canal being limited for all vessels to six miles an hour.

Calcutta, Jan. 15.

A lecture which has been delivered by Sir Syed Ahmed before a large and influential assembly of Mohamedans at Lucknow is attracting much attention. The high authority of the lecturer, who is an ex-member of the Supreme Legislative Council, founder of the Mahomedan College at Allyghur, and one of the most widely known and respected leaders of the Mussulman community, would of itself give great importance to any public utterance of his, while the vigour, eloquence, and bold tone of the speech combine to make it one of the most remarkable political discourses ever delivered by a Native of India. The object of the lecture was to explain the attitude which the Mahomedan community ought to adopt with regard to the political movements of the time, and what action it should take with regard to the political agitation which has lately grown up in India. The lecturer began by saying it was no business of the subjects of the Empire to interfere with its foreign policy. That should be left to the Government, and subjects should concern themselves only with internal policy. Now, how did the Government deal with such matters? It had constituted Legislative Councils, for which it selected experienced officials and gentlemen whose high social position made them worthy of a seat. Some people might ask why these latter should be chosen for social position rather than for ability. He would reply that this method of selection was necessary at present. The landed gentry of India unfortunately did not now possess trained ability; and would the Indian aristocracy like to have a man of low caste or insignificant origin in authority over them? Nobody would like it. Then, again, he knew from his own experience that no law was passed without full inquiry by a committee, and without every opportunity being given for an ample expression of public opinion. Could it then be said that the people had no share in making the laws? The first duty of the Government, he conceived, was to make Her Majesty's Empire so firm CALCUTTA, JAN. 15.

Natives of India knew nothing as to the social position of those sent to govern them. Moreover, Great Britain was one nation, while it was absurd to describe India as such.

"Think for a moment what would result if all appointments were given by competitive examination. Over all races—not Over all races—not only over Mahomedans, but over Rajahs of high position and brave Rajpoots, who have not forgotten the swords of their ancestors, would be placed as ruler a Bengalee, who at the sight of a table-knife would crawl under a chair. There would be no part of the country where we should see at the tables of justice and authority any faces but those of Bengalees.

"I am delighted to see the Bengalees making progress; but the question is, what would be the result of their rule on the administration of the country? Do you think that Rajpoes and fiery Pathans would remain placed under Bengalees? Therefore, if any of you, men of position, gentlemen, men of the middle class, or of noble family, to whom God has given sentiments of honour, if you accept that the country should the middle class, or of noble family, to whom God has given sentiments of honour, if you accept that the country should groan under a Bengalee yoke and the people lick Bengalee shoes, then in God's name jump into the train and be off to Madras? But if you think the prosperity and honour of the country would be ruined, then brothers sit in your houses and bring your wants to the notice of the Government in a calm and courteous manner."

The lecturer then considered the demand of the congress that the people should be allowed to elect a portion of the Legislative Councils, and show that no practicable plan could Legislative Councils, and show that no practicable plan could be devised for securing an adequate representation of the Mahomedan and warlike up-country races. Everybody, he went on, knew that the agitation of the Bengalees was not an agitation of the whole of India; but, even if it were so, the Government was still strong enough to suppress it. It was not strange if the Government entertained some suspicions of the Mahomedan community that not strange if the Government entertained some suspicions of the Mahomedan community—that community which had ruled India for a hundred years, and which was of the blood of those who had made Asia and Europe to tremble. Therefore their course of action should be such as to convince the Government of the wrongness of any suspicions regarding them. If any such existed, they should conduct themselves in a calm and straightforward manner, and cultivate mutual affection.

He thought the Government had made a mistake in not allowing the Hindostanees to become volunteers and in not giving them commissions in the army, but he laughed at such complaints when coming from the unwarlike Bengalees. He believed, however, that the time was coming when Mahomedans would appear in glittering uniforms as colonels or majors, but they must wait patiently till the Government saw fit to make this concession. Meanwhile they must be careful to give no cause for suspicion of disloyalty to British rule in India, which was still comparatively recent; and the British Government was not to be blamed if it still felt some hesitation in trusting the people. The Government had already tion in trusting the people. The Government had already shown a great desire to admit Natives to civil employment, but had not always been wise in the manner of doing it.

Now Lord Ripon had a very good heart and a kind disposition, but a weak hand and Radical ideas, and the result of his measures was that in no town were the Hindoos and Mahomedans equal, and there were few places where the latter had any chance of being elected to the local boards. Sir Syed concluded his address by urging his hearers to turn their attention to higher education. Till their nation could produce highly-educated men it must remain degraded. He was a man of over 20 years and although he could not sweet to see the of over 70 years, and although he could not expect to see the Mahomedan community attain prosperity he hoped for it, and he doubted not that it would be ultimately attained, if only they followed his advice.

SANITARY NEGLECT OF INDIA. (Times of India.)

(Times of India.)

In a sanitary report regarding Rajpootana we come across a typical example of how an epidemic of cholera is brought about in India. A great fair is held annually in November in the town of Pushkur, which is situated about six miles to the north-west of Ajmere, and has a population of about 4,000, almost all of whom are Brahmins. The houses are built on the borders of a sacred lake, which, when full, covers an area of about half a square mile. The lake contains no spring, but is dependent solely on the rains for its water; and it has no outlet, though a considerable amount of percolation takes places into the sandy soil. The Pushkur fair was duly held last year, the number of visitors attending it being variously estimated at from 125,000 to 200,000. Owing to scanty rainfall, the water in the holy tank was unusually low. Despite this fact, however, the vast majority of the pilgrims, as a religious duty, bathed in and drank the water of the tank, which, it is needless to say, soon became exceedingly foul. A prompt outbreak of cholera was the natural result. The disease first showed itself amongst the visitors staying in the prompt outbreak of cholera was the natural result. The disease first showed itself amongst the visitors staying in the densely-packed town, then it appeared amongst the pilgrims in the vicinity, the permanent residents in the town being the last to suffer. The fair was abruptly broken up, and the assembled multitude fied by road and rail. They all carried the scourge with them in every direction, and the disease soon became general in nearly all the surrounding districts. This epidemic lasted just one month, from the 9th of November to the 10th of December, and carried off something like 1,000 persons, the registered mortality at the town of Pushkur itself being only 135. The whole story is a most suggestive one, and throws a strong light on the sublime most suggestive one, and throws a strong light on the sublime indifference manifested by the village population of India in regard to the most simple and elementary laws of sanitation. They come together in thousands, deliberately pollute to an unspeakable degree of foulness the water which they have to drink and cook with, and then, when the cholera scourge inevitably makes its appearance in their midst, they hastily decamp and spread the disease broadcast over the land. When people act so ignorantly and recklessly, the wonder is not that cholera has so many victims in India, but so few. The Pushkur incident points to the necessity for some firm and drastic preventive measures on the part of the Government. It perhaps would not be going too far to absolutely prohibit the holding of fairs at any place where the water supply for all purposes depends on a single tank. Unless a place has at least two tanks in its immediate vicinity, one of which can be reserved for drinking and cooking purposes, while the other may be given up to bathers, and for the washing of clothes, it should not be allowed to be compared to the compared t not be allowed to become a centre for dense crowds of people to mass together. Failing action on the lines we suggest being taken by Government, cholera is bound to continue to be the all but invariable concomitant of Indian fairs.

INDIAN TEA IN AFGHANISTAN. (Times of India.)

In writing on the subject of the Russian advance across Central Asia we have frequently laid stress on the economic side of the question, and have pointed out that the absorption of fresh territory by the Muscovite invariably means the establishment of a cordon of prohibitive dues to keep out articles of Indian and English manufacture. An apt illustration of this is afforded by the trade in Indian tea through. Afghanistan, which during the past year or two has, from a condition of fair prosperity, been literally killed off. It will surprise most people to learn that one maund of Indian tea, that is 80lbs., after passing through Afghanistan and reaching the Russian boundary line has to pay a duty of Rs.38 before it is allowed to enter the Czar's territories. When carriage expenses and the duty levied by Afghanistan come to be added to this, heavy impost, we find that without reckoning the freight to Peshawur, the total charges on 80lbs. of Indian tea before it reaches Bokhara amount to the astounding sum of Rs.82 annas 4. It is clear that no department of trade could hold its own in the face of such crushing imposts. While the Russian customs duty is the heaviest item, the taxes levied by the Ameer are also preposterous. Rs.38 per maund are exacted on arrival at Cabul, and a further sum of Rs.16 on despatch from the Afghan capital. There are other charges amounting to Rs. 7 before the tea reaches Bokharan territory, and then superadded to all this is the Russian extortion of Rs. 38. With the Russian tariff we have of course no power to deal. But surely something might be done by the Indian Government to induce the Ameer to grant more reasonable terms. Abdul Rahman throughout his whole career has shown himself wonderfully keen to the main charge, and it would not be difficult to convince him that a small and precarious trade with all the life crushed out of it by heavy taxation is incomparably less remunerative than a large volume of commerce burdened only by moderate imposts. At present the trade in Indian tea with Central Asia has dwindled down to practical nothingness; the lightening of the Afghan charges would at least help to revive it. We trust, therefore, that the complaints, and well-founded complaints, now being put forward in the Press by struggling Indian tea planters will move the Governme

FURLOUGH FOR NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS. (Pioneer.)

Some two or three years ago we wrote very strongly upon the question of furlough being granted to non-commissioned officers in the British Army, who might earn it by exemplary conduct; and we are glad to see that under recent orders action has been taken in the direction then indicated. It is universally admitted that the efficiency of our short-service army must depend to a very great extent indeed upon the non-commissioned officers, and everything that can be done to make these men satisfied with their lot and equal to discharging their duties should be carried out in the most generous spirit. No one would attempt to deny that furlough in England will tend to make service in India extremely popular, as the non-commissioned officer will not grow despondent at the prospect of fifteen or sixteen years' soldiering away from home; but even the new rules which guide the grant of furlough are so framed that they bear hardly upon deserving men. Under this ruling a man who has served ten years at home may, after two years in India, claim to be granted the privilege, whereas another who may have come out after two years' service at home will have to serve ten years in India before he is eligible for furlough. This is an anomaly which amounts practically to the infliction of injustice upon a large number of non-commissioned officers, and it would be well if the attention of the military authorities were at once directed to it. Six or seven years of service in India should entitle men who have extended their service and are willing to re-engage for twenty-one years, to this privilege of six months' furlough. We are convinced that if this change were made the Army would be saved the loss of many of its very best non-commissioned officers, who take their discharge through being home side.

DECORATIONS AND THE PUBLIC SERVICES. (Pioneer.)

One of the most curious facts in connection with the superior Services in this country is the almost complete silence in which they have hitherto worked, and the systematic want of recognition which has attended services of which the nation has good reason to be proud. The Mutiny was the one and only event which has brought the personality of our Civil Officers at all prominently before the English people. Excepting the heroes of those stirring times it is doubtful if even the most limited home public know anything of the many eminent men who have served in this part of India during the last fifty years. Who beyond a limited official circle could give any personal account of the men who are responsible for the enormous administrative progress of the last thirty years?—the officers who have carried out the vast series of Revenue Settlements now expiring; who have covered the country with a network of railways and canals, telegraphs and post offices; who have reorganised the jails and police, and brought education and medical relief within the reach of millions. Then there are the men who have established elaborate systems of revenue and criminal administration; the Commissioners who have been and still are responsible each for the maintenance of the peace among five or six millions of proud Rajputs or turbulent Cujars; and, last but not least, scores of district officers who almost single-handed control thriving jurisdictions, collect an enormous revenue, govern great cities, repress crime, nurse important Municipalities until they can walk by themselves, and bear on their overladen shoulders the fate of a teeming population. As matters now stand, it is hardly possible that the intelligent foreign critic can fail to be struck by the contrast between the treatment which some minor official at Hong Kong or Mauritius receives from the Department he serves, as compared with the way in which the State treats its servants here, and he will not fail to suspect that there must be something in the work done by the Services in this country which debars them from the recognition and respect which officers of a similar grade meet with elsewhere. Further, in practically debarring them from the honours of all kinds the State loses a very simple and effective means of extending the prestige of its officers among a native population which is by tradition acutely sensible of the value of such distinction. It is clear, that a wise Government will regard as one of its most incumbent duties the introduction of any measure which will tend to increase the dignity of its higher officers.

THE TELEGRAPH IN UPPER BURMA. (Pioneer.)

The work of the Telegraph Department in Upper Burnea during the past two years has been of a kind to severely tax the energies of the officers employed, but the success gained shows how efficiently they have carried on the construction and maintenance of the lines. The principal stations are now well served, and branch lines have been made to various points of importance. The extension from Mandalay to Bhamo was quickly carried out last cold weather, and thus the most northern military post, only a few short marches from the Chinese border, is in actual communication with India. The Irrawaddy is twice crossed by cables on this section, but hereafter the stream will be spanned by the wire where the channel narrows. At present all messages to and from Burma have to follow the circuitous route vid Arakan and Chittagong; but in a few months a new line will be completed from the Nampur direction. At the opening of the war in 1885 the telegraph reached only so far as Lakhipur on the Cachar frontier, but it has since been extended eastwards through Manipur, and by this time it has nearly reached Tammu. Thence the new line will run to Kendat and southwards down the banks of the Chindwin to Ahlon, where an office has been open for a considerable time past. Two parties are at work in the Cindwin Valley, and ample material has been stored ready for use. A cable will be laid across the Irrawaddy, from Sagain to Ava, and eventually Mandalay will be placed in direct commuication with India by this Chindwin-Manipur line. This will serve to relieve the heavy traffic which now passes over the wires from Calcutta, via Arakan, to Burma. Among the miscellaneous stores captured at Mandalay were several telegraph cables which Thebaw had obtained from Europe, and these are found to be quite good enough for the short distances that have to be dealt with. As we noticed some months ago the Chinese are pushing their telegraphs westwards, and eventually an overland line from India by way of Bhamo and Manipur is likely to be established. I

NATIVES IN THE RAILWAY SERVICE. (Times of India.)

Every effort is being put forth to employ Natives on the East Indian line, and this company's staff of Native drivers and shunters numbered on December 31 of last year 219. These men are employed in working goods and ballast trains on the main line, as well as mail and mixed trains on the branch lines. The pay of Native drivers on the branch lines is Rs. 21 per month, and on the main line Rs. 22-8 to Rs. 30 per month. The pay of Native shunters is from Rs. 15 to Rs. 18 per month. Through employing this class of men the company calculates that from April, 1875, to December, 1886, a saving of over 46½ lakhs of rupees has been effected. On the Rajputana-Malwa Railway there was an increase during 1886. of eleven Native drivers and seven Native shunters. Of these only two can read and write English fairly well, and three others can read the timing on their line-clear messages. The district locomotive superintendent reports that the men have an inadequate knowledge of locomotives and are heavy in their consumption of coal. It is also stated that he was the state of t the class employed are slow in qualifying themselves for the post of drivers, though every encouragement is given them. After a training several of the firemen have proved themselves competent as shunters, and do their work fairly well in that capacity. Owing to the opening out of new lines there is at present a great scarcity of good Native drivers, and whenever competent men offer themselves they are always engaged. In the case of the Southern Mahratta Railway no system of training Native drivers and shunters has yet been adopted, but In the case of the Southern Mahratta Railway no system of training Native drivers and shunters has yet been adopted, but the locomotive superintendent proposes shortly to submit a scheme for the establishment of schools at the principal locomotive stations. In forwarding his return for 1886 the Agent observes:—"It is to Eurasians that the company must chiefly look for the present for strengthening the running staff." With regard to the Native drivers and shunters employed on this railway it is reported that all the drivers and four of the shunters are able to read and write English. The pay of the drivers ranges from Rs. 1-8 to Rs. 3 and that of shunters from shunters are able to read and write English. The pay of the drivers ranges from Rs. 1-8 to Rs. 3, and that of shunters from annas 9 to Re. 1 per diem. On the North-Western Railway the Native drivers and firemen form 76 per cent. of the running staff, and are well spoken of by the locomotive superintendent. The following sentences from a report by the locomotive superintendent of the Burma Railway are significant. "Each year," he writes, "I find, on the whole, that the working of the traffic by Natives is far more satisfactory than by Europeans. This fact may be the result of our arrangements. Europeans. This fact may be the result of our arrangements here to keep half the number of drivers required Europeans, and the other half Natives, but whether this is so or not it is quite clear that the present arrangement is economical in every respect, and the amount of work saved in the absence of notices that the tentile department is very great. We of petty reports by the traffic department is very great. or petry reports by the trained department is very great. We have had no cases of insobriety among the Natives, but I regret to say we have had to dismiss the eight new men (Europeans) who were appointed at the beginning of the busy season of 1886 for drunkenness." "In conclusion," says the same report, "it will be seen from the foregoing that, on the whole, the experiment of increasing the mechanical staff of this line by training Nations as agains men has been successful this line by training Natives as engine-men has been successful in every way, and it has also been the means of making the European establishment much more careful and less troublesome.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES IN INDIA.

(Englishman.)

The amount of capital invested in Joint-Stock Companies in this country is much larger than many persons might imagine. At the end of 1886-87 there were no fewer than 886 Companies, possessing a nominal capital aggregating 2,913 lakhs, and an actual paid-up capital of 2,138 lakhs. As regards the working of the Companies during the year 45 increased their capital by 28 lakhs, and 64 Companies, with a paid-up capital of nearly nine lakhs, ceased to work. The number of new Companies registered during the year were 158, with a nominal capital of 193 lakhs. Out of the total capital Bengal heads the list with 968 lakhs, Bombay follows with 872 lakhs, and Madras comes third, with 144 lakhs; so that these three represent about 92\frac{3}{2} of the whole invested capital. The Companies in which the money is chiefly invested are banking, loan, and insurance Companies, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 3,23,94,324. Trading Companies, which include merchants and traders, navigation, railways and tramways, co-operative associations, and shipping, landing, and warehousing Companies, have a paid-up capital of Rs. 3,16,24,027. Under the heading of Mills and Presses, there are 53 cotton mills, 10 jute mills, 38 mills for cotton. Jute, wool, hemp, &c., 60 for the cotton and jute screws and presses, and 29 other mills and presses, the total paid-up capital being Rs. 9,10,68,956. Under the heading of tea and other planting Companies there are no less than 131 for tea, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 3,52,48,432, while coffee and cinchona represent a capital of Rs. 3,52,48,432, while coffee and cinchona represent a capital of Rs. 3,52,48,432, while coffee and cinchona represent is represented by 12 Companies, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 98,47,314. Ice manufacture is represented by 12 Companies, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 12,00,000, and thirteen miscellaneous Companies, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 12,00,000, and thirteen miscellaneous Companies, with a paid-up capital of Rs. 77,64,020. As may be seen, the cotton or pressing cotton, while Bengal comes next with 198 lakhs, chiefly invested in jute mills and presses.

As regards the capital of the tea and other plantations, no less than 343 lakhs are credited to Bengal. In Banking and Loan Companies Bengal also heads the list with 174 lakhs, Madras coming next with 77 lakhs. The trading Companies are nearly equally divided between Bombay and Bengal, the former having 147 lakhs and the latter 141 lakhs invested in these Companies. Bengal again heads the list in the mining and quarrying Companies with 78 lakhs, only 10 lakhs being invested in the much-talked-of gold mining Companies in Madras. The ice-making Companies are chiefly confined to Bengal and Bombay, while the breweries are all in the Panjab and the North-West Provinces and Oudh. There has been a steady increase since 1882-83 in the number of Companies of all descriptions, with the exception of jute mills, breweries, and miscellaneous Companies, the figures being 547 Companies in 1882-83, and 886 in 1886-87. In addition to these there are, however, a considerable number of Companies limited by guarantes, but the figures with regard to these are not very reliable. From the figures, however, it appears that at the end of 1885-86 there were 334 such Companies, almost all in the Madras Presidency, being mostly of the nature of associations for mutual assistance of a companies, almost all in the Madras Presidency, being mostly of the nature of associations for mutual assistance of a companies is shown by the fact that last year no less than 178 ceased to exist, but 43 new Companies were started, which made a total of 198 at the end of the year. The Registration Department returns a small profit to Government, for while the expenditure was only Rs. 3,789, the receipts from fees amounted to Rs. 35,463.

THE SIAMESE RAILWAY CRAZE. (Bombay Gazette.)

It is useful to bear in mind that those who "insist" on the Government of India giving a guarantee of £5,000,000 to build a railway through Siam to the hills of Yunnan in order to bring the Chinese trade to Moulmein, are the very people who in 1885 pressed for the annexation of Burma in order to open up the Chinese markets to British commerce. The Times, quoting with approval Mr. Colquhoun's declaration made at that time to the London Chamber of Commerce that a railway to China would open up markets and pay largely, improved the occasion as follows:—"King Theebaw's kingdom, under present conditions, stands in the way of the completion of the great project of an Indo-Chinese railway, for which Mr. Colquhoun and his able colleague, Mr. Holt Hallett, have furnished the preliminary surveys. It appears that if this obstacle could be removed the Government of India would have no difficulty in coming to an It is useful to bear in mind that those who "insist" on the Government of India would have no difficulty in coming to an arrangement with Siam and with Chiua." Now that the obstacle standing in the way of the great project of an Indo-Chinese railway has been got rid of by the acquisition of Burma at the cost of a heavy addition to the financial and military burdens of the Government of India it is cheer fully admitted that the great of China does not lie in military burdens of the Government of India it is cheerfully admitted that the gate of China does not lie in that direction at all, but it is to be found at the further end of a railway seven hundred miles long, starting at Moulmein and carried for the greater part of its length through the dominions of the King of Siam. We have adduced from the voluminous report, published in furtherance of the scheme, that Siam is in a state of barbarism, with oppression in every town and village, and unchequed piracy on the rivers, the King being powerless to control a rapacious aristogracy which sets being powerless to control a rapacious aristocracy which sets him at defiance. The idea is, that once the railway is made the King will be able to get the upper hand of his rebellious chiefs and establish order and good government. Obviously the process should be reversed; order and good government must precede the introduction of capital and the construction of a railway. Once the "inexhaustible energies of human cupidity" are aroused in the interest of this Siamese outcome of the are aroused in the interest of this Siamese outcome of the Burmese adventure, the necessity of establishing on a firm basis the authority of the King of Siam will become a theme for much persuasive eloquence. We shall then find ourselves in considerable danger of being led farther afield in search of those "boundless possibilities," of which we heard so much when India was asked to occupy Burma as the portico to China. The absolute certainty that a railway to Ssu-mao, on the con fines of Yunnan, would not tap the trade of China, any more than a railway to Snowdon would tap the trade of the Thames, will not weigh for an instant in the balance once the London than a railway to Snowdon would tap the trade of the Thaines, will not weigh for an instant in the balance once the London Press echoes the cry for "More Markets" raised by the Chambers of Commerce of the metropolis and the provinces. This potential result of Mr. Colquhoun's second and more recent campaign at home cannot be treated lightly. What happened two years ago in the case of the great project of the Indo-Chinese railway through Burma may easily cooperat any moment in the case of the projected raileasily occur at any moment in the case of the projected rail-way through Siam. The Government of India will have itself to thank if its hand be once again forced in this fashion. When Mr. Colquhoun was advocating throughout England his scheme for a railway through Siam, which is to be guaranteed out of the Indian revenue, he was, as he still is, a Commissioner in Burma and a Government servant, drawing Government pay. Undoubtedly his official capacity has lent a quasi official weight to his advocacy of the line, and his confident affirmation that it will tap Chinese trade and be a remunerative investment of private capital—if guaranteed by State resources. The Government of India has the best means of testing the statements put about with so much enthusiasm and such undoubting faith by one of its own servants. Does it accept them as strictly and literally correct? If so, why are they not put before the world in the regular form, on the authority of the Government? If not, why does the Government allow one of its own servants to preach a policy of railway extension beyond the frontier, in which it does not itself believe? We do not suppose for a moment that the Government approves of the propaganda, bur the public at home may be easily led to infer that it does.

KILLING WITH KINDNESS. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

In the Punjab we have such a list of authorised holidays, Christian, Hindu, and Mahomedan, local fairs, feasts, and Saints' days, with a dozen last Saturdays and fifty-two Sundays, that school and office work are but as occasional lagoons in archipelagoes of leisure. And, in addition to ordained holidays, it is an accepted custom of the country that each man or boy shall absent himself for periods varying from a couple of days to a month, on various pretexts of a domestic, social, or religious nature. Like the man in the Scriptures, your subordinate has married a wife or bought five yoke of oxen, or a piece of ground. The Papal Non Possumus is not more final and decisive, nor accepted with more respect. We are accustomed to hear the indulgence, with which Native clerks, workmen, and schoolboys are treated in this matter, spoken of as mihrbani, or kindness; but there is serious reason for the belief that the desultory habits induced by excessive holiday-making and slack attention to work in hand are among the greatest hindrances to progress with which this Province has to contend; and that their encouragement, so far from being a kindness, is one of the most cruel injuries that can be inflicted on the people. The easy and, if truth must be told, demoralising terms on which a modicum of education can be had, keeps up an endless supply of candidates for employment, the majority of whom would be far better off at the ploughtail or in the shop. Employers of labour complained, and not without reason, that the exceeding ease and slackness of rulein Government offices not only withdraws a disproportionate number of men from trade and industry, but has created a false ideal of work. They say that the habit of keeping holidays and of absence on personal affairs is the most serious hindrance with which workshops have to contend, preventing the execution of contracts and the attainment of a high degree of skill. It has not yet occurred to the Punjab workman that time has any value, nor, while the Government publishes such

THE MOSQUITO. (Times of India.)

Few of us have the heart of grace to say a single good word for the mosquito. The tiny creature is perhaps the greatest torment of everyday Indian life, and we think of it only as a pugnacious and bloodthirsty little wretch, against whom war to the death has to be ceaselessly waged by day and by night. However, we may take it for certain that in the wonderful chain of nature the mosquito has its uses, though our appreciation of these can hardly be expected to be so lively as our disapproval of its evil propensities. Moreover, while the vices of the mosquito appeal to our feelings in a very obtrusive and disagreeable manner its virtues require for their discovery the research of the microscope and the patient observation of the naturalist. At a recent meeting of the Madras Auxiliary Branch of the Asiatic Society a most interesting paper was read, collating a number of facts in regard to the uses, so little known, of the mosquito. The question naturally suggests itself, Why should the creature mar its extremely good record as a larva by becoming a flying insect, and a very vicious one to boot, even for the limited period of three days? The gentleman who read the paper at Madras has certainly failed to prove to us the uses of the mosquito in the form in which it is known to us. The suggestion put forward by an English doctor resident in China that the mosquito extracts minute threadworms which exist in the human body (sixteen of these having been detected by aid of the microscope in the body of one mosquito) requires further proof. The fact that the male mosquito does not bite, or at least is never caught in flagrante delicto, and that the female only pays us her delicate attentions, may be flattering to our vanity, but is hardly consolatory for the pain inflicted. We are willing to forgive the ladies many things, but when it comes to biting the limit of our clemency is surely reached. Nor does the circumstance that the mosquito is a most beautiful thing under the miscroscope adequately atone for its viciousness. If enthusiastic microscopists can work up a glow of pleasurable excitement over the many thousand times multiplied form of the insect, they should in fairness take all the bites. It is also suggested that mosquitos are most useful as food for fishes. Doubtless in due course the fishes become food for human beings, but this ingenious chain of reasoning will hardly convince the human beings that it is eminently just and fair that they should be food for the mosquitos. On the whole the usefulness of mosquitos cannot be said to have been yet proved, or at least discovered. If nature intended intended them for water filters, it should have stopped there, and not given the creatures wings and stings. We are afraid no firm of filter-makers would successfully push their wares if the use of the appliances was attended with so much physical pain and mental irritation as the bloodthirsty little mosquito sets itself out to inflict in the closing three days of its month's existence.

BENGAL.

RAJA DURGA CHURN LAW, Bahadur, C.I.E., has made the munificent gift of Rs. 10,000 to the Calcutta District Charit able Society. Of this sum 1,000 is for the Leper Asylum The balance is to be invested, and the interest to be spent on the relief of the poor of the city. The Raja has also given Rs. 5,000 to the funds of the Mayo Hospital.

THE cultivation of cinchona as a private enterprise is extending in the Darjiling district in a highly satisfactory manner. There are now four private plantations there, possessing between them 2,098,580 plants, or nearly half as many as the Government plantation. The gross yield of the former in 1886-87 was 30,000lbs. of bark against 1,760lbs. in the preceding year.

It is now almost sure that the Chief Engineership of Bengal will be vacant in February next by the promotion of Colonel C. M. Browne, R.E., to major-general, which will entail his retirement from the service. The Joint Secretary, Colonel McNiel, R.E., will return from furlough early in the year, when he will replace Colonel Harrison, R.E., who returns to the North-West Provinces and Oudh. The question as to who will succeed Colonel Browne as Chief Engineer is still in nubibus. The nomination will be awaited with peculiar in terest by the Department.

In Bengal the cultivators, as a class, are by no means so hopeless in the matter of debt as they once were, although there is plenty of room for improvement. Out of a total grant of Rs. 1,50,000 sanctioned for advances under the Agriculturists Loans Act of 1884 in Bengal for the year 1886-87 the amount actually disbursed was only Rs. 8,822. The largest advance was in Orissa, where a sum of Rs. 2,337 was distributed between the Khoorda rayats of Puri and the Briso rayats of Balasore.

THERE are now no fewer than 94 collieries in existence in Bengal, and of these 70 are in the Burdwan district. The total output during 1886 was 951,001 tons. The Kurhurbali collieries yielded 168,309 tons; the Serampur, 118,670 tons; Kuldiha, 113,481 tons; Chunjka, 76,274 tons; Laikdi, 71,375 tons; Kamardobi, 52,636 tons; and Borea, 51,005 tons. Dr. Oldham, the late Superintendent of the Geological Survey, has given us an approximate estimate of the resources of the Raniganj coal-field, setting down the available coal at no less than 14,000 million tons.

It is stated that at the instance of the Finance Committee and of the Government of Bengal, the subject of the equalisation of the rates of travelling allowances to chaplains of the Church of England and Scotland and Roman Catholic priests is now under the consideration of the Government of India. There is also a proposal to reduce the Presidency house rent allowances of chaplains, and it seems that the Ecclesiastical Department will have its share of the delicate attention of the authorities.

The strength of the Bengal Police is 22,681, and out of that number 4,504 men were fined or degraded last year, 591 were dismissed, and 525 were punished by sentence of the law courts. The highest grade of policemen in the black list were inspectors, out of 160 of whom 8 were departmentally punished, while 1 was dismissed. Happily there is another side to the picture. Good conduct stripes were worn by 11,042 men, or nearly half of the whole strength, and these stripes carried increased pay. Money rewards were paid in 1,440 cases, and 71 men were specially rewarded with promotion.

MADRAS.

Some months ago M. de Closets, C.E., submitted to the Government of India a proposal to raise the capital, without a guarantee, for constructing a line of railway on the 2'6" gauge, Dseauyille's system, from Mayaveram station on the South Indian Railway to Tranquebar. Mons. de Closets has now been informed, in reply, that his Excellency the Governor-General regrets his inability to accede to the proposal, in its present form, inasmuch as the introduction of a variety of gauges for railways on the plains of India is much to be deprecated. The Government of India also point out that the South Indian Railway, with which the projected line deprecated. The Government of India also point out that the South Indian Railway, with which the projected line would be connected, being on the metre gauge, makes it all the more desirable that the short length of line proposed, only eighteen miles, should be on the same gauge, so that it could be worked with the rolling-stock of that Company—an arrangement which, it is urged, would not only be economical. but would also obviate the inconveniences and drawbacks of trans-shipment at the junction. The Government of India, however, are willing to consider a revised scheme for a cheap metre-gauge line, laid, if possible, with second-hand rails from the South Indian Railway, and worked as above suggested. As an example of the unsatisfactory working of light rails and As an example of the unsatisfactory working of light rails and light rolling stock, and as affording an instructive illustration of the drawbacks of adopting a different gauge from that already in the district, Mons. de Closets has been referred to a note by the Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for State Railways, on the defects of the Permament Way materials and rolling-stock of the Morvi Raiway. The note

"In 1881 the Political Agent in Kathiawar endeavoured to float a scheme for laying steam tramways on certain roads in that province, commencing with the road from Wadhwan to Rajkot. He proposed the formation of a company in which the Kathiawar Chiefs should take shares. The scheme did not receive sufficient support, and fell through, and it was never brought officially before Government. The Morvi Chief was, however, a warm supporter of the project, and wished to lay the tramway from Wadhwan to Rajkot on his own account. During his recent visit to England he contracted with Messrs. Ker, Stuart and Company, of London and Glasgow, for seventy miles of their patent steel tramway rails, 19 lbs. to the yard and 2'6" gauge; also for three locomotives and seven carriages, including a state saloon, sixteen waggons, and two brake-vans including a state saloon, sixteen waggons, and two brake-vans. When the matter was brought to the notice of the Government of India regret was expressed that the standard gauge of the district has not been adopted, but it was too late for any reconsideration of the question. The permanent way was therefore laid on an existing road, and the line was opened for traffic in March, 1886. In April, 1887, the Consulting Engineer to the Government of Bombay reported that the light rail twists and bends with the least subsidence of the bank, consequently the road requires to be looked after most carefully and constantly that "small steel sleepers are not a success or any stantly; that "small steel sleepers are not a success on any part of the line," consequently it has been found necessary to part of the line," consequently it has been found necessary to relay all the sharper curves with a heavier rail, 22lbs. to the yard; and it is not intended to get any more of the original pattern of permanent way; that the original type of locomotive is very inferior, and possesses little tractive power; that the rolling - stock originally sent out is much too light, and not adapted to the conditions required for Indian work; that many of the vehicles have already been re-constructed, and the remainder will be taken in hand by degrees. Subsequently the Deputy Consulting Engineer has also reported that the small rails cut the tyres of the engines and carriages very badly; that the light bogie waggons supplied from England are flimsy and dangerous; and that the axles and springs are dangerously weak. The question of increasing the gauge to one metre, which is the standard of the district, is now under consideration, but, unfortunately, when the is now under consideration, but, unfortunately, when the mistake has once been made of adopting an unsuitable gauge, the conversion is impossible, except at a ruinous sacrifice both of permanent way and also of rolling stock. This unfortunate failure forms an instructive example of the disastrous results following the adoption of crude suggestions without due consideration and competent professional advice.

BOMBAY.

It is a sign of the times that the people in Bombay are taking more kindly to hotel life than they formerly did. One reason for this is of course to be found in the fact that abnormally high rents are demanded for bungalows and residences that are not at inconvenient distances from the Fort. The hotels have also improved in regard both to accommodation and cuisine, to an extent that seems almost incredible to those who can remember what a hotel was like fifteen years ago. At present so much regard is paid to the convenience of residents and visitors, that almost the same degree of comfort can be obtained in a hotel as in a bungalow, probably at less expense and certainly without the worry and annoyance inseparable from house-keeping. Some indication of the extent to which the American boarding system is adopted in Bombay is afforded by the fact that the Apollo Hotel, large and commodious as it is, is already found to be too small to fully satisfy the demands made upon it. That such success as this should have been attained with a hotel which has only been in existence for months is a testimony of good management. In order a few months, is a testimony of good management. In order to be able to provide accommodation for some of the many against whom the door has now to be closed, Mr. Pallonjee, the against whom the door has now to be closed, Mr. Pallonjee, the proprietor, proposes to make extensive additions to the Apollo. A large part of the vacant ground on the harbour side of the present building will be covered by new quarters for married people and bachelors. The plot of ground at the west end of the hotel will also be built upon. One of the features of the new additions will be a large dining-room filled with tables to accommodate small parties of from four to a dozen. The plans also provide for reception, reading, and billiard-rooms. The improvements in Watson's hotel, which have been a progress for some months are now rapidly approaching completion for some months, are now rapidly approaching completion. Extensive improvements are also being carried out at the Great Western Hotel, where wide verandahs are being run round the main building.

BURMA.

ONE of the chief annoyances to the European in Burma appears to be about to disappear. It has hitherto been so difficult and expensive to obtain servants in the country that it was found to be advisable to take them from India. domestic servants (Burmese) are coming forward in large numbers at low wages.

What, asks the Pioneer, are the Home Government doing in the matter of the Burmo-Chinese Frontier Demarcation Commission which should assemble this cold weather at Bhamo? They have made no sign yet, and time is rapidly slipping away. The frontier is luckily quiet, but this question of delimitation should not be left to lice over too long. of delimitation should not be left to lie over too long.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF AT LAHORE.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was to visit the Station and Section Hospitals and Mian Mir on the 24th December. Fort Lahore was also inspected by his Excellency on the afternoon of the 22nd December. His visit was, the Lahore paper believes, rather a surprise on this occasion, as no notification had been previously given.

TROOP ACCOMMODATION AT PINDI.—Work on the new hut. cantonment at the West Ridge, Rawal Pindi, has now been commenced. The ground will be rented this year and purchased next year. The first huts to be built will be the combined canteens and coffee shops. These will be very fine huts, some 200 feet long and 40 feet broad. After that the theatres and sergeants' messes will be commenced. Over a lakh has been sayetioned been sanctioned.

DEATH OF A JOURNALIST.—Mr. Peter Scott, manager and editor of the Punjab Times, died on Monday, December 19th. This gentleman was well known in the Punjab. He was formerly editor of the late Indian Public Opinion, Lahore, and was afterwards on the Civil and Military Gazette staff, which he left in 1873 to take up the business of contractor, but in this last venture he did not succeed, and resumed his work of writing for the Press.

LA MARTINIERE SCHOOLS, LUCKNOW.—The prize distribution of the Lucknow Martinière took place on the 20th ult., General Sir Charles Gough, V.C., K.C.B., Governor of the College, presiding. The audience was large. The Principal, College, presiding. The audience was large. The Principal, in his report, alluded to the success of the pupils in the Rurki in his report, alluded to the success of the pupils in the Rurki examinations. Towards the end of his report the Principal complained of the dilapidated state into which the Lucknow Martinière building has been allowed to fall. General Gough, whose presence and interest were evidently much appreciated by the boys and girls, and were acknowledged by hearty cheers, spoke as follows:—"Ladies and Gentlemen,—This school, endowed by the noble charity of General Martin, is doing a good and useful work in the country. It stands in the place of parent to about 100 orphan children, besides providing education for large and increasing numbers of young scholars on very moderate charges. The review of the year's work which Mr. Sykes, the Principal, has just read, proves the zeal and ability of the teachers and much steady application on the part of the scholars, the College having gained the highest place in the Rurki examinations. The boys look robust and manly. This is due, no doubt, to the healthy exercises in games and the gymnasium which are so much encouraged in the school, and which are a principal part of the education of English boys, and I entirely endorse the Principal's appreciative remarks on the bright and pleasing appearance of the girls. It has been a great pleasure to me on several occasions to see the school companies of volunteers both at field firing and on parade, and to observe their discipline, efficiency and smartness. The state of the building is certainly not what its founder could ever have contemplated; but I hope, as also do founder could ever have contemplated; but I hope, as also do the other Governors, that this matter will soon be attended to.

I am sure I am speaking in the name of the Governors generally in taking this opportunity of thanking the Principal and the other masters, and also the Lady Superintendent and her staff for the good work they have done; and I wish to refer to the skill and attendance of Dr. Cleghorn, to which I am assured the good health is largely due." An adjournment was then made to the picturesque grounds of the college, where a very acceptable feast was ready for the children.

THE BALKAN ROUTE TO THE EAST.

The following surmise of the Politische Correspondenz hardly seems to be borne out by facts. It learns that the English Postmaster-General has caused inquiries to be made in Belgrade as to the arrangements for the conveyance of mails and passengers by the route to Salonica via Servia. It is the intention of the British Government to send the Indian mail via Salonica instead of Brindisi as soon as the short connecting line of railway in the Balkans is opened, and as soon as the steam-ship service which the Austrian Lloyd and the Messageries Company have announced their intention to inaugurate between Salonica and Port Said has been established.

Captain H. J. Elverson, 1st Battalion Royal West Surrey Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 4th Volunteer Battalion, which becomes vacant on April 1 next, on the completion of Major A. H. He was present at the occupation of Khelat-i-Ghilzie under Brigadier-General Hughes, and in the affair at Shahjui and the operations in the Logar Valley, and in the engagements of Ahmed Kheyl and Urzoo, near Ghuzni. He accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Candahar, and was present at the battle of Candahar, being mentioned in despatches, and receiving the medal with clasps, and bronze decorations.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The Nizam's more than princely offer of more than half a million sterling as a contribution towards the frontier defence of our Indian Empire is an event of such importance—it is, as regards Indian politics, the event of the last few months—that precedence is rightly given, in the present issue of the Asiatic Quarterly, to an article, evidently of an "officious" character, respecting it. It seems to us that the writer fails in his attempt to justify the delay which has taken place on the part of the to justify the delay which has taken place on the part of the Government of India, in seizing so brilliant an opportunity of accentuating its agreement with the Nizam's opinion that the defence of the Empire concerns all its component parts and all its feudatories. Had the offer proceeded from Kashmir, or from the great chiefs of the Punjab, cynical critics might have tried to discern in it a regard for their own safety.

'Tua res agitur, paries quum proximus ardet.'

For the Punjab would necessarily suffer first from a successful Russian invasion. But, coming from the Nizam, no candid statesman can impute such a motive. Wisdom would, it seems to us, have counselled the instant acceptance of the munificent gift, the merit of which is heightened by the consideration that British conduct towards the Nizam—and that not in the Berar question alone—has not been characterised by undue liberality. If it be the part of statesmanship to do the right thing, as by intuition, at the right time, it may be feared that statesmanship has here been conspicuous by its absence. Time has been allowed for the enthusiasm on the part of other feu.

has been allowed for the enthusiasm on the part of other feudatories, which a prompt and honorific acceptance of the offer might have aroused, to cool down. Voilà tout!

Colonel Malleson devotes a well-considered paper to the Cape route to India—our only alternative route in war-time to the Suez Canal, which, neutralised or not, an enemy would be certain "accidentally" to block—to the chances of hostile attack which it offers, and to the utter absence of due protection to our own possessions at many most important points. tion to our own possessions at many most important points. It may, perhaps, be doubted whether it be possible to overestimate the mischief which may arise from French preponderance in Madagascar, flanking, as that island does, both the Suez Canal route and that via the Cape. But the gallant writer assuredly does not overrate the danger to which hostile occupation of Delagoa Bay would expose us. The insane refusal to pay the insignificant sum of £12,000, which the Portuguese asked for the cession of this incomparable position, was an act of Lord Granville. Ce qui ne laisse pas beaucoup

The "Hindu widow" question is the subject of an article by Dewan Rughonath Rao, the able Prime Minister of Indore, in reply to Sir W. Hunter's Paper on the subject in the October number of the Asiatic Quarterly. The Dewan differs from the learned author of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in holding that "Native opinion, and the constituted advisers of Government, will never sanction any change in the existing state of things; they never have effected any change for the better." There is, he thinks, "a very strong minority" of intelligent Native opinion, which would justify the Government in authoritatively ascertaining "what is Hindu law on the question at issue," and in "enacting a declaratory law" in accordance with it. To this end he submits Druft of such an Enactment (p. 52); and he says that, were it passed, "the whole controversy would come to an end, and there will be no virgin widow in India" (p. 49). If the writer, than whom no higher authority can well be quoted, be correct in his opinions, it lies in the power of the Indian Government to confer the highest possible boon on a class of oppressed Hindu girls estimated "to equal the female population of Scotland." Western India claims, and deservedly so, a full share of notice in the present issue. Mr. W. G. Pedder shows, in an eminently readable and instructive article, how entirely the constitution of village Communities in Western India bears out Sir Henry Maine's opinions on this subject, while the Police of the Bombay Presidency is, as regards constitution and duties, effectively contrasted with that of the Mother Country by Mr. E. C. Cox. Mr. Wollaston's very able paper, showing the great difficulties which stand in the way of establishing the Agricultural Banks, which Sir W. Wedderburn wishes to introduce into India, in order to free the Ryot fro

Captain Conder's article on the Gnostics seems to prove that their esoteric teaching was really a pure scepticism which can be traced through many other outward forms of apparently irreconcilable divergence in externals. "They believed," he tells us (p. 96), "only in the adoration of the mystery of life, and held that all religions were but partial recognitions of this inexplicable mystery. Sir G. Birdwood's article on the "Empire of the Hittites in Art" will be found interesting to all who have not, and to not a few who have, studied this recondite subject. recondite subject.

That Sir Richard Burton is a remarkable man is scarcely open to question. As a linguist he stands out well-nigh, if not quite, unrivalled, for he not only knows a vast number of languages from a theoretical point of view, but he has mastered their delicate nuances, an acquaintance with which marks the difference between a native and a foreigner. His journey to Mecca and Medina is, too, perhaps the most venturesome and marvellous exploit recorded in the annals of enterprises. To have presed for months emidt the fontion enterprise. To have passed for months amidst the fanatic Arabs in a disguise which could last only so long as his knowledge of Eastern ways and Eastern tongues served him in good stead was so difficult as almost to pass the bounds of imagination. A single word incorectly pronounced, a solitary epithet misplaced, the slightest hesitation in matters of dogma, would have led to instant detection, followed by no less instant death. Burton visited, too, all parts of the world—Europe, Asia, Africa, and America all had their turn, and on each occasion the intrepid traveller struck out a newand original path for himself. Yet, with all these splendid records to his credit, Sir Richard Burton has not been too successful. What is the reason of this? Many a man presenting but a tithe of the reason of this? Many a man possessing but a tithe of the claim to public gratitude has been lionised, has received the highest praises from the authorities, has been placed upon a nighest praises from the authorities, has been placed upon a pedestal of glory, and has ended his days in wealth and affluence. But the hero of Mecca is a persona ingrata. Outspoken in language, inconsiderate in his condemnation, indifferent to the foibles and weaknesses of mankind, enemies become more numerous than friends. Who but "Dick Burton," for instance, could or would have published such a book as the unexcised translation of the "Arabian Nights?" A work which, though incomparabily able and casting an unexampled blaze of light incomparably able and casting an unexampled blaze of light upon many obscure customs and traditions of the East, is, on the other hand, so glaring, so unpruned in its language, as to outrage all propriety. The very possession of such a publication cannot be openly avowed, and in many other ways Burton has hit out right and left, never fearing, never caring. Such action frightens, alarms, offends, and when a friendly word is needed or a kind suggestion required when a friendly word is needed. or a kind suggestion required people recoil and "pass by on the other side." This is the reason why Burton has not forged ahead to an extent commensurate with his undoubted . abilities

His biographer also seems to have followed in the same footsteps, for he never fails, when an opportunity presents itself, to pen a sneer at some one in high places who has dared to the a sneer at some one in high places who has dared to thwart Sir R. Burton; while even those in humbler spheres of life do not escape rebuke. This defect sadly mars the pleasure which these volumes would otherwise afford; for they are cleverly written, and the fund of adventure and information is well-nigh inexhaustible; but at this season of the year forgiveness is the order of the day, and the public will, perhaps, pass with a smile of forgetfulness the peculiarities to which we have drawn attention and admire the current for which we have drawn attention, and admire the superb fear-lessness, the unbounded self-reliance, the incredible linguistic talents of as high-minded as son of England as ever upheld in foreign lands and amidst barbarous people the honour of the National Flag, and the credit of the Empire which gave him

TAKEN IN-A SKETCH OF NEW ZEALAND LIFE.+

Tis not all gold that glitters. Emigration is not an unmixed blessing; there are pleasures connected therewith, but there are also discomforts, hardships, and a thousand and one daily annoyances which detract largely from the delights of life. In books things are very different. There all is couleur de rose; the climate is beautiful, work is healthy, all that is bad is burked, all that is good is glorified. But "Hopeful" writes in far different strains. For once the public can learn the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth as to colonial life; and assuredly the picture is somewhat different from the usual stereotyped descriptions of the professed litterateur. "Each for himself" is the motto of the Antipodes. "In sickness, distress, or calamity there are not the same helps or resources to turn to as in this country; so the struggle appears fiercer for each individual. There are few of the public institutions to be found in the Colonies as at home; few eminent physicians who give their advice at certain hours gratis; and, again, there are no dispensaries for the distribution of medicine to the poor at no dispensaries for the distribution of medicine to the poor at a trifling cost. Everything must be paid for."

Here is a summary culled from "Taken In." Medicine, doctors' fees, coals, are dear. Vegetables and meat cheap. Horses good, but mostly carelessly driven with the inevitable result of numerous accidents. Climate middling, the wind result of numerous accidents. Climate middling, the wind being boisterous and the dust blinding. There are few English birds, and none of any sort that sing. Wild flowers and fish are conspicuous by their absence. Children are forward and pert; the people, though as a rule professing to be Liberals, are for the most part loyal and attached to the mother country. Arson, drinking, and wife desertion are the commonest of crimes; insanity is on the increase, and the population is only kept up to a normal level by the influx of European blood.

Such is New Zealand life. If so, not a few will be tempted

Such is New Zealand life. If so, not a few will be tempted such is New Zealand life. If so, not a few will be tempted to bear the ills of the old country rather than brave the discomforts of an adopted land; but, be this as it may, would-be emigrants had far better while in England read "Taken In," and so avoid all chance of being "taken in" the other side of the world.

THE DECLINE OF BRITISH PRESTIGE IN THE EAST.*

For many years it has been known to the few familiar with Oriental politics that the El Jawaib has done good service to this country, in so far as it advocated the interests of England this country, in so far as it advocated the interests of England in regard to the Eastern question. Any remarks, therefore, from the pen of the late editor of that paper should command attention, even though, as in the case of "The Decline of British Prestige in the East," the drift of the article is not of an encouraging nature; and assuredly there is good scope for reflection in what is written. "The policy of England in Egypt has, despite of official utterances and after-dinner speeches, been disease that the Egyptians, to all portions of the Egyptians." been disastrous to all parties-disastrous to the Egyptians, disastrous to an parties—disastrous to the Egyptians, disastrous to Turkey, and disastrous to the best interests of the British Empire. . . . England as a great Mohammedan power in India is regarded to-day, perhaps unjustly, in the eyes of Islam as the destroyer of their independence—the frustrator of their faith! She has caused a great portion of the Mohammedan element, those 160 millions of Islam, to watch with greater interest than ever her movements in Central Asia. That is what England has gained by her short-sighted policy in Egypt. This is what Mr. Gladstone has brought upon England." What blasphemy! and what impiety thus to write in regard to the hallowed name of the most thus to write in regard to the hallowed name of the most heavenly of all heavenly statesman!

Again: "The decline of English prestige in the East began more seriously from the day Khartoum and Gordon fell into the hands of the Mahdi; the day when the English retreated and left the country which they went to civilise in disorder and anarchy, throwing it back to what it was two centuries ago, and after having cost the Egyptian Government half a century of time, and millions of money, and enormous efforts to subjugate." This is even more unkind than the former paragraph. How could a man of any pretensions to decency thus speak of the Great and the Good!

We refrain from further quotations, and will only add that

We refrain from further quotations, and will only add that Selim Faris is a keen observer, a trenchant critic, a fearless admirer, and it may be hoped a firm friend. He says his say well; his suggestions are pregnant with importance, and those in high places would do well to ponder seriously as to what he has to tell, for if his advice be sound, and his views worthy of acceptance, it were insensate folly and criminal madness to neglect the means of restoring to Great Britain the prestige which is the rightful inheritance of the conquerors of India and the rulers of millions who profess the Muslim faith.

THE BENGALI BABU.

THE Babú of Bengal will perhaps be surprised, but will no doubt he delighted to find that at the present moment he is being discussed by the Press in England. The Times this morning devotes a leading article to him, and the Sunday Times last week discussed him in a leader also. Neither paper is very complimentary about him. Both appear to have taken Sir Lepel Griffin's speech when laying the foundation stone of the public library at Gwalior as a text upon which to preach a sermon against the Babú. And the Babú certainly gets a sorry scolding from the two papers. The Sunday journal accuses him of possessing a mean, reptile spirit, fawning for favours, looking to the British Government for almost, his daily bread, yet doing all in his power to revile that Government, and to bring it into contempt. Owing everything to English rule-his very life, the safety and security of his person and home, the education of which he makes so bad an use, and the situation which he holds under Government in consequence of that education—his delight is to vilify that rule, and to blacken the characters of all who are concerned in its administration. He has hitherto enjoyed extraordinary immunity for the free exercise of his ungrateful and seditious proclivities. The Government, which gives him all the advantages which he enjoys, has hitherto allowed him to talk and write against it and its officers as he pleases. Not only this, but it has refused permission to its officers, whose characters have been maligned grossly and maliciously in the Bengali Press, toprosecute in the courts of law their wicked and cowardly detractors. For some strange reason or other the Government of India for years past seems to have looked upon the Bengali Babú as the representative interpreter of the millions of India. The cry for self-government, political representation, and all the other sham shibboleths which a veneer of English education has taught the Babú to adopt, have been accepted in various official quarters as the real aspirations of peoples claiming the recognition of a certain individuality under our rule. And this fallacy has had its effect in England, where the loquacious and multiscribbling Batú has found several friends and advocates. If these friends had their way India would be handed over to the rule of irresponsible chatterers, who talk daggers but use nothing more warlike than their evil-speaking tongues and seditious-writing pens. Miserable in physique. wanting in moral and every other kind of courage, the Bengali aspires to govern races their superiors in every particular, except the knack of cramming a certain amount. of English language and talk into their heads. The-Bal u is a talking animal, and his volubility has . hitherto been his power. It is satisfactory at last to find that he is being discovered in England, where he hoped to gain the greatest support towards his impertment assumption of being the representative of the Nativemillions of India. He is being, we are glad to say, found out. The Times this morning, pretending to condemn Sir Lepel Griffin's speech to the Mahrattas of Gwalior asbeing injudicious and likely to excite the passions of one part of the Queen's subjects against another, is obliged toacknowledge that there is much in it that was true, and much that was opportune in the references which he madeto the Bengalis. And the Times proceeds to sketch the-Babú of Bengal as follows:-

The Bengalee has his merits. He is acute, eloquent, and receptive of European ideas. He is an able Civil servant. Englishmen have no wish to see him subjected anew to Rajpoot, Sikh, or Mahratta. Under British rule he is secure of his full rights, and possibly something more than his full rights, as against the other Natives of India. But he has to remember that he owes these advantages entirely to our supremacy. But for that, his intelligence would be powerless to cope with the more masterful qualities of other Indian races. The Babú has hitherto had things pretty much his own way. His noisy agitation has been taken by too many people in this country as the voice of a united nation. His former con querors have listened in contemptuous apathy. But, all at once, in tones which cannot be misinterpreted, they remind the Bengalee that he is in most respects their inferior, and that it is only the presence of the British in India which has made him what he is. It is not, perhaps, too much to hope that this plain reminder may make the Bengalee a little more grateful, and a little less voluble about what he asserts to be the denial of constitutional rights.

Taking this as a fair likeness the portrait cannot be said to be flattering. But it is to be hoped that the Babú will recognise it, and come to the conclusion that there a e others who now see him as he is. And it is also to be hoped that the Government of India will cease from its folly of petting and pampering the most contemptible of its subjects, and will look rather for support to those nobler races under its rule, who still retain their proud traditions, and have not lost either the courage or manhood of their ancestors.

THE PRICE OF SILVER.

The New Vienna Tayblatt writes:-It remains to be seen whether the Paris reports about the silver syndicate will be confirmed; but one thing is certain, that a rise in silver could be more easily carried out and would produce larger profits than a rise in copper. There are no accumulations of silver in the world. The milliards of silver which exist in the form of money and plate are not for sale, and bars exist nowhere to any extent. The demand for silver is quite equal to the nowhere to any extent. The centant of silver is quite equal to the production, and, commercially, there is no reason for the depreciation of the metal. The circumstance that the European miuts were closed to the coinage of silver at the time the demonetised silver of Germany to the coinage of silver at the time the demonetised silver of Germany came into the market sufficiently explains the depreciation, which, later on was accentuated by rumours, such as that of the approaching suspension of the Bland Act. The position of silver as an article of commerce does not justify the decline in price. Even at the old standard of 15½ to 1 of gold the yearly production of silver amounts only to £21,000,000. The industrial consumption reaches quite £5,000,000 a year, and the coinage of dollars in the United States under the Bland Act absorbs nearly another £5,000,000. The average requirements of the East must be estimated as at least £6,000,000, so that there remains only from £5,000,000 to £6,000,000 yearly for the supply of silver currency in the remainder of the world. Under these circumstances, there is more likely to £6,000,000 yearly for the supply of silver currency in the remainder of the world. Under these circumstances, there is more likely to be in future a scarcity than a superabundance of silver. It is at present only a question of improving the market position of the metal. The London market, which constantly requires silver for remittances to India, is known to possess no stocks. Should, therefore, a syndicate succeed in intercepting the supplies to the London market, a rapid rise must ensue both in bar silver and in the Indian exchanges. The means necessary to carry out such a plan need not be excessively large. One million sterling suffices to buy the supplies of two months. large. One million sterling suffices to buy the supplies of two months, and as the Bank of France makes advances on silver on favourable terms the same capital could be used several times over. The regular demand for silver would from time to time allow of favourable realisademand for silver would from time to time allow of tavourable realisations of the purchased bars at rising prices. All silver obligations would also rise, the exports to the East would increase, and the price of wheat would advance. This would strengthen the factors which make for a general advance, and thus bring to the syndicate numberless allies. Let the price of silver be lifted from 45d, to 50d, and the stone thus set in motion would continue to roll of itself. Against stone thus set in motion would continue to roll of itself. Against these great changes of profit there are, in the present commercial position of silver, but few chances of loss, for it would not be difficult to realise at present prices. Should the Parisian Haute Banque really plan a silver campaign, we anticipate a still greater success than has attended the manipulation of copper. Austria, it is true, would be in the awkward position of either losing part of her silver through export or seeing a premium again established on silver. This is the factor which the syndicate would have specially to consider.

THE exports of tea from India to all ports from 1st May to 30th November was 49 3-10 millions of lbs. in 1885, 54 3-5 millions in 1886, and 64 millions in 1887.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

HONORARY MAJOR JOHN ROBERTSON, C.I.E., Assistant Accountant-General, Military Department, retires from the service on December 31st, with the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, but will remain employed in the Accounts Department until February 29th, 1888. It is reported that he will be granted a special pension of £500 per annum. No one, says the Pioneer, will envy him his good luck, for no officer in India ever made himself better liked by superiors and inferiors than John Robertson has done. He has been a tower of strength to the Department. It is currently reported that he will be succeeded by an outsider, who is now serving in the Civil Accounts Department, in which case there will be an intelligible howl.

The following appointments are made:—

On transfer to the Bengal Presidency, the following Royal Engineer officers are posted as follows:—Lieutenant E. H. de V. Atkinson to the Presidency and Oudh Command, Military Works Department; and Lieutenant F. Baylay to Rangoon for sub-marine mining duty.

Colonel H. J. Hallowes, 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment, Commandant, Deolali Depôt, has been appointed an Assistant Adjutant-General of Division, and Colonel W. R. Truman, 7th Dragoon Guards, has been appointed Commandant, Deolali Depôt.

THE Lincolnshire Regiment, from Meerut, will probably go to the hills this summer, as its detachments at Delhi have suffered severely from fever.

THE Derajat Mountain Battery at Loralai, in Biluchistan, and No. 2 Company, Bengal Sappers, in Burma, will probably be relieved this cold weather.

Volunteering in Calcutta is looking up. No fewer than 776 volunteers turned out for the guard-of-honour on the arrival of the Viceroy. The Presidency Corps are also proud of their officers having won the inter-regimental match (No. 31) in the Bengal Presidency Rifle Association. The highest possible individual score was 110; the best man in the Calcutta team made ninety-eight, and the average for the four who shot was ninety. shot was ninety. Tall shooting!

THE following alteration in language rewards has been pubished:—"Rewards of £200 for proficiency in one of the following languages—Arabic, Russian, or Turkish—will be granted to a limited number of officers who obtain eight of the total marks laid down in para. 4 of G.O. 12 of 1887. Officers who have been granted this or a similar reward from any source will not be eligible for a second reward for the same language."

Dr. Lidderdale, as Sanitary Commissioner for Bengal, has again been taken to task for the inordinate length of his an-The publication for 1886 consists of 163 pages 68 of which are devoted to the personal proceedings of himself and his subordinates—an useful record, no doubt, but one that the Lieutenant-Governor thinks "need not be embodied in an annual report." Sir Steuart Bayley is of opinion that the annual report." Sir Steuart Bayley is of opinion that the document can very well be cut down to 50 or 60 pages, and document can very well be cut down to 50 or 60 pages, and "trusts the Sanitary Commissioner will aim at reducing the report of 1887 to some such dimension." Similarly, exception is taken to the "extremely minute details" given in the vaccination report for the past year regarding the sources and character of the lymph employed, the production and employment of bovine lymph, operations performed, local opinion on the value of bovine lymph, &c., all which "might be appropriated with a view to some special priate in a special report submitted with a view to some special action being taken, but are unnecessary in an annual administration report.

NATIVE PRESS.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN.

The Bombay Samachar says that Sir Lepel Griffin seems to be bent upon libelling those who have been writing strongly against him in the Native Press with reference to his recent career at Bhopal. The address given by him at Gwalior was a fulsome flattery for the Mahrattas, a libel against the Bengalees, and a sneer against the approaching National Congress. His speech is calculated to extol one community at the expense of the other, and thus keep them constantly at loggerheads with one another. What could have been his object in adverting to controversial and race matters on such an auspicious He has not stated his reasons for doing so, but we can well imagine them. The Bengalee Press have been making serious accusations against Sir Lepel, and the latter has in his turn taken this opportunity of making a fierce attack upon the Bengalees in general. It hardly becomes an officer of Sir Lepel's standing Sir Lepel's advice to the contrary, continue to identify themselves with the Bengalees, and acknowledge the bond of brotherhood. It is evident that Sir Lepel does not wish to see a "United India;" but is careful that one section of the community should not be on terms of amity with another. Samachar hopes that the Government of India will either publicly or privately express their disapprobation of the speech, emanating as it does from such a high official.

The Jam-e-Jamshed says that Sir Lepel Griffin's speech at Gwalior is unbecoming a Government official of such high standing. Sir Lepel has made an ill-timed attack on the Baboos of Calcutta. It might be said that it is because the Baboos have been writing strongly against Sir Lepel and his recent career that he has attacked them in the manner he has done. It is dangerous that an officer of such high standing and position should make such an inflammatory speech in a public assembly. The Jam-e-Jamshed hopes that the Government of India will take due notice of this speech, and inform Sir Lepel that it was one which was not suited to the occasion and also to the dignity of such a high Government official.

THE EXTENSION OF BOMBAY.—The Kaiser-i-Hind says:—The trouble which the Extension Committee have taken, and the patience and energy which they have displayed in the discharge of their arduous labours, deserve our warm commenda-The changes which they propose are so extensive and they would involve such a tremendous outlay that it would not be possible to carry them all out. The project of reclaim-ing a large tract of land from the sea at Colaba and Wal-keshwur must also be regarded as impractible from a pecuniary point of view. There are, on the other hand, many proposals made by the committee, which, if adopted, would render many waste tracts of land around Bombay habitable, and relieve the pressure of population felt at present in Bhuleshwar, Mandvie, and other crowded districts.

HINDU SOCIAL REFORM.—The Kaiser-i-Hind says:—Those who have read the letters which appeared over the signature of "Aryan," in the Times of India, will not see much reason for satisfaction in the progress which the Hindu community has made within the last twenty-five or fifty years. They have, no doubt, got over some minor prejudices, but early marriages, the restrictions of caste, and the woes of widowhood are evils which flourish at the present moment almost as well as they did before. The letters of "Aryan" are worth our serious consideration. But we do not agree with the writer in the satisfaction he feels at such progress as the Hindu community have made, because, at the rate which they were progressing, we do not think the evils can die away before several centuries have elapsed. In social matters, the progress of the Hindu has not kept pace with their educational advancement.

COMMERCIAL.

The Indian Tea market was virtually closed for the holidays after the 22nd ultimo, and was re-opened on the 2nd instant, the quantity offered during this week having been moderate, viz., 17,400 packages. There has been a brisk demand, chiefly concentrated on Teas at and under 1s. per lb., which may be quoted dearer. Good and Fine Pekoes and Broken Pekoes sell rather irregularly at about prices ruling Pekoes and Broken Pekoes sell rather irregularly at about prices ruling before Thristmas. The statistical position of Indian Tea at the beginning of the new year must be considered satisfactory, as should consumption continue to increase at the present rate we shall probably deliver, during the current season, more than will be received, so that our stock on June 30 will be smaller than last year. Up to Dec. 31 42½ millions had left the warehouses, and during the next six months it is not unreasonable to suppose that we shall deliver 48 millions more, which will bring the total deliveries for twelve months to say 90 millions of Indian Tea, or five millions more than the expected import, which, according to latest advices, is estimated at 85 millions. On the other hand, the export from Ceylon during the next six months will be considerably more than last year, and as these Teas will, to some extent, take the place of Indian, their arrival in larger quantity may prevent much rise in prices; still the position these Teas will, to some extent, take the place of Indian, their arrival in larger quantity may prevent much rise in prices; still the position of our market is such as to warrant the expectation that steady and perhaps hardening rates may be looked for for some months to come. Ceylon: Public auctions have comprised 5,232 packages. There is still an absence of competition for parcels lacking point and full flavour, but really desirable lots have met with attention at firm rates. Java: Several sales have been held, comprising 1,550 packages, which have met with fair competition, especially Teas for price, which are evidently in rather better demand. Messrs. Elliot, Lack and Porter's Circular says:—Inquiries for most classes of China Teas have been numerous, but the quality of offerings does not tempt buyers to operate till they are compelled, and this will not be until the country gets to work again, and orders commence to flow in. Dealers' stocks of useful sorts of Tea 8d. up are most limited. Demand has been strong for all Black Leaf kinds, but Foochow descriptions have been neglected. In public sale useful Kaisow sorts brought 5½d. to 6d. Padrae, 4½d. to 5d. Padrae, 13d.; good common to fair. Black Leaf kinds 5½d. to 6½d., and better sorts4 2d. to 8½d. Oolongs: Nothing has been done privately, but at auction fine to finest Formosas in boxes sold 1s. 4½d. to 1s. 4½d., Superior at 1s. 0½d. to 1s. 1d. to 1s. 42d., Superior at 1s. 02d. to 1s. 1d. Some 670 packages are printed for next week, and as long as the room is resorted to we cannot expect any improvement in values. Green Teas remain much as before for lower grades, medium kinds going in sellers' favour.

Molerate supplies of Indian Tea have met with a good reception, and the firmness in rates, noticed at the closing sales of last year has been maintained, demand for grades below 10d. being especially active. Consumption appears to be going on satisfactorily, the deliveries for last month being 700,000 lbs. in excess of December, 1886, although quotations then were even below those now current. Although the quality of Ceylons offering has been fairly good generally, really high class Teas are in small proportion, and prices under the pressure of heavy supplies show a tendency to further weakness, especially in the less attractive parcels of grades above 1s. Pekoe Souchongs 92d. to 11d. are in best demand.

Messrs. Layton and Co.'s Circular says:—A year ago we noted that two unfavourable features were becoming increasingly manifest as regards China Tea, (1), the deterioration in the quality, and (2), the consequent tendency of Indian growth to supplant it amongst consumers. During the past year the position has become intensified in both these respects, so that during 1887 the decrease in deliveries of China Tea has amounted to some twenty-four million pounds, while the monetary value shows an even larger proportionate decline, owing to the low prices which have ruled, especially for first crop Teas during the present season. This unfavourable condition of the trade appears, however, to have at last forced itself upon the attention of the Chinese authorities, who are now inquiring into the causes which have led to the present state of things, with the view of effecting reforms imperatively necessary, both as regards the attention of the Chinese authorities, who are now inquiring into the causes which have led to the present state of things, with the view of effecting reforms imperatively necessary, both as regards the manufacture and the export duties at present charged. We trust that, with the assistance of the leading English houses in China, these efforts may prove at all events sufficiently successful to avert that extinction of the China Tea trade with which it is now, at least partially, threatened. There have been few important fluctuations in values during the past year, but the very low rates obtained for the first crop Teas in July last caused a decided reaction later on in these grades, and many second hand parcels were resold during the autumn on the market at advances of 1d. to 3d. per lb. on original The general inferiority of quality in this season's China leaf, and the serious falling off in the deliveries have been compensated for by a remarkable increase in the trade in Indian and Ceylon Tea, the consumption of which together shows an excess compared with 1886 of 18½ millions, while the imports have been more by 13 million lbs.

THE steamers Vespasian and Lorne, from Saigon, are believed to have foundered in the China seas.

Construction work on the line of railway between Hirokh and Kotal has begun, and Swiss engineers hope to complete it in six months.

TWELVE candidates are to be selected for appointment to the Indian Forest Service at the next competitive examination to be held in London.

COLONEL CONWAY GORDON, Director-General of State Railways, who has been suffering from an affection of his eyes, is much better, and probably will be able to rejoin his appointment in the middle of January.

THERE is no foundation for the statement that a new Press Act is being prepared in the India Office. At least the Government of India knows nothing of the matter, and the Home authorities are not at all likely to take up such a measure without due consultation.

ACCORDING to the latest official report the area under rice in Burma is 130,677 acres more than last year's area, or an increase of 3'9 per cent. Owing to insufficient rain in the latter half of October and the beginning of November the crop will, on the whole, be light in all districts, except Hanthawaddy and Henzada, a lower estimate is taken than last year, but on 33 per cent. of the cultivated area a 16-anna crop is still extended while a 27 magnetic of the estimate is 1. pected, while on 37 per cent. of the area the estimate is 14 annas, and on 30 per cent. 12 annas. Notwithstanding the increase of area cultivated it is estimated that there will not be available for export more than 950,000 tons of rice, including what will be required for Upper Burma.

THE Rev. Henry D. Porter, in a letter dated Pang Chuang (Shantung), 8th November, writes the following account of the overflow of the Huang-ho, which he himself has witnessed:—
"We crossed the Yellow River on the 23rd September. The flooded country extended in breadth about 20 English miles, and from 50 to 65 miles in length. The river is now a vast tumultuous rush of water. Six weeks later we re-crossed. The turbid stream had clarified. In many places it could be waded across. The reckless leaving of its 'bed could be waded across. The reckless leaving of its 'bed and board, of fifty-two years ago was repeated. The terrible break is reported as being at Shih Chiak'ou in Cheng-cho, 60 miles west of Kaifung. The two hsien cities of Chin-yeh and Wei-chih were submerged, the officials of the former alone escaping. Rushing southward the waters reached the Ju River (see Williams' latest map), and then followed this stream into the Huai River. Carters reported the stream as entering the old bed at Huai-an Fu in Kiangsu, near the old debouchement. It is needless to say that, having floated upon its swift current, the thought of its devastating power in the new region is something terribly oppressive." new region is something terribly oppressive.'

THE FLOODS IN CHINA.

TO THE EDITOR.
SIR,—The reports from China of the awful suffering caused by the Sir,—The reports from China of the awrul sunering caused by the overflowing of the Yellow River must have excited deep sympathy with the vast number who have so suddenly been rendered homeless.

The following account, from an eye-witness, will be read with painful interest. It is an extract from a letter from Mr. Slimmon, a member of this Mission, who writes from our mission-station at Chaukia-k'eo. He says:—"The damage it has done is terrible. Just fancy a vast plain, about half the size of Scotland, thickly populated, suddenly turned into a raging sea! This is what has taken place here, and one trembles to think of the great numbers that have been drowned. Misery remains supreme in this place just now. Out of fifty-six streets in our portion of the town only five are not flooded; the others are all destroyed and perhaps are many perished by the drowned. Misery remains supreme in this place just now. Out of fifty-six streets in our portion of the town only five are not flooded; the others are all destroyed, and perhaps as many perished by the falling of houses as by drowning; yet one hardly knows whether to think those who are drowned or those who escaped the more fortunate, for those who perished are at least saved the misery of dying from cold and starvation. You would weep (as I did) were you to see the terrible desolation and distress that abound, and feel helpless, as I do, to relieve them. 'Bread, bread!' is the one cry; but bread is not the only thing they need. Hundreds have escaped with their bare lives; there little all has been lost. They are huddled together in straw huts, with scarcely enough to cover them, and the nights are getting bitterly cold. Words cannot describe the scene. I am living in the midst of it, able to do little or nothing for want of money. The distress will continue for many months to come; cruel winter will soon be on us, and hundreds will perish from cold. Although the break in the river's bank were to be stopped up right away, the water could not be drained off the land in time to sow next year's crop, so there will be a famine. Even were the water to be dried up, the people could not sow, for all the present year's harvest, that was safely gathered in, has been swept away, and they have no seed to sow. Their case is indeed desperate."

Mr. Paton, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who was residing in our Mission premises, says, in a letter to the North China.

Mr. Paton, of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who was residing in our Mission premises, says, in a letter to the North China Herald:—"The river is all coming this way now, and a racing, mad river it is, and I fear the damage in Ngan-hwuy and Kiang-su Provinces must be added to the misery inflicted here. I can do nothing to relieve the widespread wretchedness. It is the most populous district in all Ho-nan, and I can quite safely say millions are driven out of all they possessed."

Mr. J. J. Coulthard, another of our missionaries, writing from the same city, says that the country is flooded for an immense district.

same city, says that the country is flooded for an immense district, 450 li by 150 li. If these figures are accurate they are equal to about 135 miles by 40 miles. Mr. Coulthard adds:—"The scene outside and within the walls of parts of this city is one of desolation and destruction. From the city walls, right away to the north, is one vast sheet of water.

A calamity of such awful magnitude calls for immediate help. A contribution of £300, another of £200, and a number of smaller sums, have been sent to this Mission in aid of the sufferers. This money we have telegraphed to China for immediate distribution by our missionaries. Some of our most competent men have been appointed for further help in the work of relief, and by this morning's mail we learn that $3,000 have been raised in China and placed in the hands of our missionaries for distribution.

Contributions in aid of the sufferers will be gratefully received by this Mission and promptly telegraphed to China.—I am, yours faithfully,

B. Brownall, Secretary of the China Inland Mission.

THE FLOODS IN CHINA.

A correspondent of The Times under date Peking, Nov. 12, after reciting the facts of the overflow of the Yellow River, concludes as follows:—Ever since the appearance of a clever article on afforestration in the Revue des Deux Mondes a few years ago Europeans here are never weary of repeating that the planting of trees is the only thing which will afford protection to China against the fearful scourge of the Vallow Pixer The proceed armed if practically and the Yellow River. The proposed remedy, if practicable, would certainly do good, but it does not go to the root of the evil. The incurable troubles which have been so long connected with the Yellow River are primarily caused by its tendency to silt. In its middle course it descends into China from the high Mongolian plateau. The great change of level gives extraordinary velocity to the stream. One cannot state the number of miles it runs per hour; but it is said that at one of the principal ferries the boat is often carried down three miles, though the principal terries the boat is often carried down three lines, though the crossing is only half a mile wide. Secondly, the land of North West China to the depth of several hundred feet consists principally of the famous loess or yellow earth—a soil of inexhaustible fertility if the rainfall be sufficient. The loess earth, which is very light and friable, is carried away in immense quantities by the swiftly-rolling matters and from the colour it imparts to them the river derives its mable, is carried away in immense quantities by the swiftly-rolling waters, and from the colour it imparts to them the river derives its name. The quantity of earth held in suspension is so great that whenever, as happens in seasons of drought, water from the river is admitted into the Grand Canal, it is necessary to dredge out the mud at the bottom of the canal before the passage of the grain fleet in the following year. The silt brought down as just described, from above is deposited all along the lower course of the Yellow River, particularly near the coast, where the proximity of the sea checks the speed of the current. Year by year the river shallows, its banks being gradually raised in proportion, till at length not merely the surface of the water, but even the bottom of the bed, is higher than the level of the surrounding country. That the bed, is higher than the level of the surrounding country. That this is really the case has been proved by Europeans who have visited the old channel left dry in 1852, and have found themselves walking up hill as they entered it through a gap in the massive walls. Under such circumstances, despite the watchfulness of the guardians, sooner or later a breach cannot fail to be made, and one can easily imagine the terrible nature of a flood thus pouring down from a higher elevation on the plains below. Even further inland the evil makes itself carriers of the restrenge of the re tion on the plains below. Even further inland the evil makes itself seriously felt, as the passage of the water is unnaturally retarded by the shoaling lower down, with the result that there is an increased pressure on the banks and a greater tendency to inundation at the season of high water. The conditions of the Yellow River thus differ from those of any other great river in the world, and its conservancy is a problem of which the difficulty is immediately apparent. Nor with these facts before us need we try to account for the changes of course which the stream has undergone at different periods by imagining as some authorities have surgested that the lovel had been imagining, as some authorities have suggested, that the land had been subjected to changes of level by the rising or sinking of the earth's Commenting on the communication the same journal states that the Deluge alone affords a parallel to this appalling catastrophe, and the horror of it is increased by the fact that the last great inundation of the Hoang Ho which occurred within living memory can hardly have been less destructive. The loss of life, enormous as it seems to have been, is not even the worst part of the disaster. Death itself would be a preferable fate to that of the survivors, who, deprived of home, sustenance, and clothing, have had to face the rigours of a winter withsustenance, and clothing, have had to face the rigours of a winter without shelter, and the prospect of a future without resource or occupation. Famine has followed flood in many districts, and the wretched peasants have not only lost their houses, but their last year's crops and the seed for their next year's sowing. The Chinese Government has done its best for the relief of the widespread distress, and both the Emperor and the Empress have contributed largely out of their private fortunes towards the same object. No less than 32,000,000 lb. of rice, which in the ordinary course would reach Peking from Central China in the spring, was ordered to be despatched forthwith to the inundated districts as soon as the extent of the disaster was known. But even if every effort is made that it is possible for the Central Government and the local authorities to make, it is certain that the misery of the surviving peasantry will be and must be extreme.

TEA GROWING IN CEYLON.

A meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute was held on the 10th inst in the Whitehall Rooms of the Hôtel Métropole, to hear a paper read by Mr. John Loudoun Shand on the subject of "The Tea Industry of Ceylon." Sir John Coode, K.C.M.G., presided.

Mr. Shand opened his paper with a brief reference to the origin of tea, as far as it was known, and the present position of tea as an agricultural industry in India and elsewhere. About 1876 the adaptability of the low lands of Coylon to tea cultivation was recorded additive. of the low lands of Ceylon to tea cultivation was proved, and it was further proved that so different was the nature of the tea tree to that of the coffee tree that much land which had been under coffee cultivaof the coffee tree that much land which had been under coffee cultivation could be readily and profitably converted into tea-producing property. The planting of tea at once began in earnest, and from the sea level to 6,000 ft. above the sea a large area was rapidly brought under cultivation. The very gloomy financial position of the island, which prevented any rush of capital towards the industry, though at the time it appeared to many to be a great and almost fatal drawback had turned out to be a blessing in disguise. The enterprise had been entirely divested of the element of speculation. The labour supply, which came chiefly from the Malabar coast, and which arrived upon the estates free of any premium or incidental charge, was practically unlimited, the average rate of pay being about 6d. per day. The Ceylon tea industry had already assumed large proportions. Therewere probably now 200,000 acres of tea planted in Ceylon, giving employment to 1,200 British managers and superintendents, and 300,000 British subjects from India and Ceylon. The probable export of teafrom Ceylon in 1890 would be 40,000,000 lbs., and by the end of the century would reach 100,000,000 lbs. As there was a very large tract of land suitable for cultivation the limits of the enterprise would only be bounded by consumption, for Ceylon had proved that it could place be bounded by consumption, for Ceylon had proved that it could place tea of superior quality in the markets of the world at a price which tea of superior quality in the markets of the world at a price which would defy competition. It was rather to the continued displacement of China tea in the English markets, and the substitution of Ceylons and Indian teas, that the British tea grower must look for the disposals of the largely increasing quantities which would be thrown upon the markets. The tea planters of Ceylon had a right to demand the sympathy and support of their countrymen. They had built up an enterprise which gave employment to hundreds of thousands of the inhabitants of Ceylon and of the natives of the famine-stricken districts of India, and gave the mother country control of the sources of tricts of India, and gave the mother country control of the sources of one of its most important articles of food supply, making it independent of foreigners.

The Chairman, in opening the discussion, said that he wished to-call attention to the favourable climate of Ceylon.

Mr. Pye, of Amoy, China, pointed out that though the cost of labour in Ceylon was only 6d. a head per diem, in the interior of China, where most of the tea districts were situated, the rate of pay did not exceed more than 5s. per month. The soil in China was extraordinarily fertile, other conditions were favourable, and when China aroused itself to the fact that it must improve the manufacture of its tea. when it became possessed of scientific methods of cultivation, and adopted honest commercial practices, it would be difficult, he feared, to find a market for 40,000,000 lbs. of Ceylon tea. The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to Mr. Shand for his paper.

PURE—EASILY DIGESTED—ECONOMICAL

"I consider FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA much better and more economical for the use of troops than the usual rations of coffee and tea that are now supplied. The strengthening qualities FRY'S COCOA possesses renders it a valuable adjunct to the list of medica comforts."

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Beview is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Ltatesman, October 1886.

or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter Review.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF

INDIA.

INDIA,

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monratry (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally doelle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus here given the English public are characterised by a Lowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public mem desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. MANUAL

COLLOQUIAL ARABIC.

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.B.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend. Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics.

Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—Saturday Review.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHEREUM.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—Dally News.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—Overland Mail.

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." TRUENER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAE DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done goog service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messra. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand moode and elite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds. The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Ponbay to the 6th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th January; and from Calcutta to the 3rd January.

The anniversary of the Imperial Proclamation was celebrated in Calcutta on Jan. 2nd by a grand parade of the regular troops and volunteers, at which the Viceroy was present, and afterwards by a State dinner at Government House.

A CHAPTER of the Order of the Indian Empire is to be held at Calcutta on Feb. 6th.

LORD REAY and Lord Connemara have visited Lord Dufferin at Calcutta.

SIE FREDERICK ROBERTS, having finished his inspection tour, is now at Calcutta.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON has recovered from the attack of fever which obliged him to take a trip to sea, and has returned to the Presidency.

A CAMP OF EXERCISE will be held near Bangalore in the second week of February.

Oossoor-road is within easy marching distance of the cantonment, and by special desire of the Maharajah of Mysore a strong detachment of his Silladar Horse will be brigaded with a British cavalry on this occasion.

DURING the Camp of Exercise the army headquarters will be located at Bangalore.

TROOPS will be divided in two skeleton armies [to operate against each other.

THE Camp is expected to last one week.

MAJOR WARBURTON, the Political Officer in the Khyber, with seven border Chieftains, has arrived in Calcutta.

A STATEMENT has been prepared showing the result of the working of the late Provincial Contract in Bengal. The most striking fact is the proof afforded of the marvellous recuperative powers of that Province, and the solid basis on which its natural wealth is founded.

THE Conference of Bengal Commissioners has opened at Calcutta. They intend to discuss the power of Commissioners and their proper relations towards the Board of Revenue, the Inspector-General of Police and other officials, and a heat of minor matters.

Mr. F. E. Elliott, Judge of Allahabad, and Mr. Kiernander, of the Financial Department, will sit upon the Commission to inquire into Mr. F. Larpent's conduct as Registrar of the Punjab University.

The Chief Commissioner, Central Provinces, has ordered the road from Nagpur to Umrair and Bewarpur to be roughly surveyed and reported on, with a view to constructing a light railway to those places, if the traffic is likely to be good. Mr. D. Wallace, Executive Engineer, is engaged in the work.

THE Council of the European and Anglo-Indian Association have addressed the Government of India in support of the recommendation of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce that all Imperial Budgets of the future should be publicly discussed, and not issued merely as Resolutions, as has been the case during the past fifteen years, except in three instances.

THE National Congress has met at Madras, and concluded their deliberations.

THE Mahomedan Educational Congress, which commenced their sittings at Lucknow on the 27th December, have concluded their proceedings.

Satisfactory reports continue to be received from our Afghan Boundary Commissioner, who is now well on his way to the Oxus, to complete the Dukchi-Bosaga, line of demarcation.

A Madras paper hears that the following scheme has been submitted for the approval of the Secretary of State for India:—Belgaum and Bellary to form together a brigide command; Bangalore to remain a division; Madras to remain a brigade; southern district to be a brigade command with headquarters at Wellington; Secunderabad to remain a division; Kamptee to be given over to Bombay; Burma to consist of one divisional and two brigade commands; Mandalay to be the headquarters of the divisional command, and Bhamo and Rangoon theheadquarters of the two brigade commands.

In Memboo the campaign against Bo Oktama was vigorously carried on, and two minor Bohs with followers surrendered. Others offering to come in.

In Meiktila Kyauklan a village was burned by a gang of 300 dacoits. One policeman and four villagers were shot by dacoits, and forty prisoners and considerable property were carried off. A body of cavalry pursued and rescued the prisoners, and recovered some property.

THE police of Wundwin in Meiktila district encountered Shwey Baw's gang. They killed Shwey Baw, and captured three followers.

Burma has now absorbed all her military and police sanctioned, save little knots of men at the depôts. Between 19,0.0 and 20,000 men have been sent in all.

THE Public Service Commission proposes to divide the service into Imperial and Provincial. The Imperial will correspond to the present Covenanted Service, but the number of posts reserved to it will be greatly reduced.

THE Indian Empire Investiture, which is to take place at Calcutta on the 6th February, is not likely to be a very considerable ceremonial.

The report of the Public Service Commission has been signed by all its members, no one dissenting. The Indian Press says that by what process the divergent and apparently irreconcilable views of a few weeks ago have been harmonised is neither very important nor likely ever to be known.

THE first sale of opium, the provision of 1885-86, was to be held at the Government opium sale-room at Calcutta on the 4th January. The total quantity to be sold amounts to 4,750 chests, of which half the number is from the Patna Factory and the other half from the Ghazipore Factory.

The recommendation of the Public Service Commission that the twenty-two years' maximum limit of age which the Commission is understood to have advised, refers to Native candidates only. The general limit for candidates for the Covenanted Civil Service was fixed by the Secretary of State, and with regulations so ordered, the Commission was, in virtue of the official instructions laid down for its guidance, barred from interfering, at the start.

According to the latest news received by the Pioneer from the Nepal frontier, Mr. Girdlestone is at present at Segowlie, and it is probable he may remain there for some time, and until events take a more decided turn. Khatmandu is denuded of troops, the Residency is in no danger, and so long as the Government of India maintains its present attitude the British resident can do more by remaining below the passes than by proceeding to the capital. At the beginning of last week Mr. Girdlestone had to visit Nepalgunge-road (the terminus at Baraich of the Bengal and North-Western Railway) in connection with urgent work previously arranged for on the frontier of Oudh and Western Nepal. Strange to say, the local officials there knew nothing of what had happened to the north of Segowlie, and at Banki, which is the most important cutcherry and mart of the Western Terai, there were only some 100 Sepoys. A sudden movement among the refugees in this district might tell very strongly against the existing Administration, but up to the end of last week there was no hint that anything of the sort was on foot.

The Report of the Special Committee of the Bombay Legislative Council charged with the revision of the Draft of the Bombay Municipal Bill has been drawn up. The Bill as amended meets with the approval of Messrs. K. T. Telang and P. M. Mehta, who may be taken to represent, in this matter, the views of the Corporation and of the general public. The Bombay Gazette says that the inherent rights of the Corporation as they have hitherto existed have now nothing to fear from any enhancements of power reserved to the head of the Executive, and have received in some respects a new development.

THE City Magistrate at Karachi has sentenced James-Grant, the manager of the local branch of the Bank of Bombay, to six months' imprisonment.

NOTES.

The announcement that the Salt-tax is likely to be increased in India in order to meet the Budget deficit will, no doubt, cause much indignation amongst the pseudophilanthropists, who take all mankind (except their immediate neighbours) under their protection. The incidence of the Salt-tax is thoroughly understood by every one who has any practical experience of India. Salt is a necessity with all people; but the poor ryot of India, on whose behalf sympathy will now possibly be asked for, will not suffer in the slightest degree by the enhancement of the tax. The large merchant and the middleman may find their profits a little diminished, but the poor consumer will eat his salt at the same reasonable rate as heretofore

OF course it would be well if the raising of revenue in India could so be arranged that nobody, except perhaps the very wealthiest, should suffer inconvenience, but this is a fiscal difficulty in all countries. In India the Incometax is a hated impost hy Europeans as well as by Natives, and is utterly unsuited to the ways and habits of the latter. A marriage license tax, increase of the stamp duties, and other methods have been suggested, but Indian Financiers brought up in European schools cling to European ideas, and so Native ideas of raising revenue are altogether ignored. Cannot a Native Financier be found in India capable of suggesting a means of taxation which will be understood and willingly accepted by all classes? It ought not to be difficult to find such an individual.

THE news brought by wire or mail to-day is not of particular importance. The Calcutta season has commenced, and Lord and Lady Dufferin are entertaining a number of distinguished visitors—the Governors of Bombay and Madras, the Duke and Duchess of Montrose, and Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes, &c.

The condemnation of Mr. Grant, the agent of the Bank of Bengal at Kurrachee, to imprisonment for defalcations in his accounts is a very sad story. Few men were more popular in India than he was, and it is difficult to believe—although the truth must be told—that so seemingly good a fellow all round should turn out to be a man on whom a shade of dishonour could be cast. Very many who knew him and partock of his hospitality at Kurrachee will deeply regret the miserable ending to what seemed to be an honourable career.

THERE has been some agitation in Allahabad in consequence of Major Branson, the Commandant of the local Volunteer Artillery, having resigned his appointment. A deputation waited upon him to inquire his reasons for this step, when he informed them that he resigned "because the Government afforded the Volunteers no encouragement, and the officers of the corps did not bestir themselves." One need not go to India for this excuse, although one may regret to learn that "the collapse of the corps is inevitable."

THERE is no pleasing some people. This is what the Civil and Military Gazette says of the late distribution of honours and rewards for the Burma campaign:—

The Burma honours list has provoked many criticisms, and much has been said to show how very many better men might have been decorated or promoted, and how miserably inadequate is the reward for work done and results attained. Comparisons have been drawn between rewards given for the Burma campaign and those distributed for others less conspicuously successful; and, in point of fact, it has generally been said that the Army of which Sir Frederick Roberts is the head has been very shabbily treated. Without going in any way into these matters we would call attention to the peculiar nature of the rewards given. According to a time-honoured precedent, C.B.'s have been awarded to nearly all officers who have commanded regiments and battalions in the field, and also to the senior members of the head quarters staff, which is of course very right and proper. Brevets have also been served out in the usual manner, if not upon the usual scale; but when we come to the distribution of the new order, the D.S.O., there seems something a little peculiar to be noted. This is, that there appears to be every chance of the new order going the way of the Victoria Cross. This latter coveted distinction was instituted for the recognition of acts of bravery displayed by such tuted for the recognition of acts of bravery displayed by such officers as were not of field rank, and consequently not entitled to any claim for a C.B. It was, therefore, in a measure an order of knighthood among subalterns. Of late, however, the W.C. has been bestowed indiscriminately among all ranks; but it was generally thought that the D.S.O. was intended as a sort of inferior Victoria Cross, to mark the same acts performed by the same ranks to reward whom the V.C. was instituted. What do we find? That in a campaign which has been pre-eminently one for the display of the admirable qualities of the rank and file, and of the younger officers, the rewards are almost entirely confined to the seniors, to whom is made a large distribution of the D.S.O. In a word, the work of the subalterns has been rewarded in their commandwork of the subalterns has been rewarded in their commanding officers.

THE annual report of the Protector of Emigrants for the year 1886 shows that during that year 746 men, women, and children left India for the Mauritius. During the same period 975 returned to India, bringing with them savings aggregating Rs. 1,39,286. The advantages offered to Indians emigrating to the Mauritius appear to be good. There is a Government official to protect their interests and see that they are fairly treated and properly housed and fod at the sugar plantations, and altogeter the conditions of their life in the island seem to be comfortable enough. The Madrassis are apparently unsuited to service away from their home beyond the sea, as suicides among them are frequent. Accidents in the Haup estates were numerous owing to a defect in the machinery, which caused the loss of fingers, and in one case the loss of a hand. It is proposed to legislate in view to compelling owners to construct their mills in such a manner as will make such accidents impossible. A peculiar feature of the coolie trade is that emigrants prefer to return to India by steamers chartered by Arab and other merchants than by the Government ships, in which they would be better off in every way; the Government vessels being better found than those of private enterprise, besides being specially adapted to the business. Good arrangements are in force on the sugar estates for the treatment of the sick, but the educational system for children appears to lack completeness.

Goa is a place that must have its attractions. Everything there must be done on stamped paper, whether the business be commercial, civil, criminal, or ecclesiastical. But, according to the news by the Mail to-day, Goa is out of stamped paper, and so we are informed that "in consequence all public business is at a standstill." Existence, however, if food and refreshments are obtainable, may be tolerable under even such sad circumstances. Goa is not a place to be despised.

THE Irish tenant who declines to pay rent under the promptings of the League is not without his imitators in The Bombay Gazette says :-

It is not surprising, in view of the tendency of Natives to postpone the settlement of just claims, to find that 14,456 estates became liable to sale last year, in Bengal, for arrears of revenue. It is, however, a proof of the forbearance and long suffering patience of Government that only 1,859 of these estates were actually sold. The Board of Revenue modestly claims that the law has been worked with moderation, perhaps even with too great leniency. Some of the Collectors of large districts are of opinion that over-indulgence has been shown. The reply of the Lieutenant-Governor to these representations is decidedly ambiguous. The law and the Government orders in force, we are told, leave to Collectors a discrement orders in force, we are told, leave to Collectors a discrement orders in force, we are told, leave to Collectors a discrement orders in force, we are told, leave to Collectors a discrement orders in force, we are told, leave to collectors a discrement orders in force, we are told, leave to collectors a discrement orders and discrimination. His Honour "certainly is not disposed to approve any recurrence to the practice condemned by It is not surprising, in view of the tendency of Natives to care and discrimination. His Honour "certainly is not disposed to approve any recurrence to the practice condemned by his predecessors and by the Board, of selling estates for very trifling or for obviously accidental arrears. A reference to these orders will, however, show that they by no means compel a Collector to accept all arrears tendered after the latest day fixed by law for payment." The Collector is thus left to the exercise of his own judgment.

ALL the Amir's spare troops in Southern Afghanistan have been ordered up to the Ghazni District, but the object of the movement is not known.

(By Telegraph.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 22.

A Gazette Extraordinary, issued on Thursday, announced an increase in the duty on salt manufactured in or imported by land into India. The duty has now been raised in Burma to one rupee per maund of 82lb., and in all other parts of British India, except the trans-Indus portion of the Punjab, to two rupees eight annas per maund. This step, although sudden, is not surprising, or altogether unexpected. For a long time past it has been generally believed that the Government would have to face a considerable deficit at the close of the financial year, and would be compelled to have recourse either to the year, and would be compelled to have recourse either to the salt duty or to an increased income-tax. The Indian Press, with few exceptions, have so far said little on the subject, but that little has taken the form of approval, and it seems clear that the step has been received with general satisfaction. The experience of the last few years has proved that the reduction in the duty has not been followed by the increase in consumption which was expected by the Finance Minister who lowered the rate, and that the incidence of the tax on the consumer is so slight that the relief afforded by the reduction was hardly appreciable. It is admitted therefore that the Government has done wisely in turning to this source of revenue rather than to the Income-tax impost, which is highly unpopular in its pre to the Income-tax impost, which is highly unpopular in its present form, and which would give rise to serious discontent if it were raised above the present limit.

The only criticism on the measure which has made itself heard so far is, that it should have been announced and discussed in the Legislative Council, instead of being notified in the Gazette. This is part of the general question now occupying public attention, whether the Budget and all financial measures should not pass through the ordeal of public debate in Council. As the law now stands the Government acted strictly within its rights, but a change which will secure discussion and publicity will be welcomed by all classes of the community, and it is to be hoped that recent representations may speedily have the effect of securing it.

It is expected that the effect of the increase in the duty during the remainder of the financial year will be an additional revenue of 20 lakhs in India, and of two lakhs in Burma; while next year it should give about 1 crore 50 lakhs in India, and 123 lakhs in Burma.

The Universities of Calcutta and Bombay held their convocations last week. The ceremony here, which the Viceroy attended, and over which Chief Justice Sir W. C. Petheram presided as Vice-Chancellor, was chiefly remarkable from the feat that two young ledies received the degree of BA. The presided as Vice-Chancellor, was chiefly remarkable from the fact that two young ladies received the degree of B.A. The Viceroy in a short speech said that he hoped this would envicercy in a snort speech said that he hoped this would encourage the ladies of India to follow their example. Sir W.-C. Petheram's address was devoted to the history of the University, which he traced from its origin in 1857 to the present time. He expressed a conviction that the Indian people could receive a proper education only through the medium of the English language, and concluded by giving the students some sound advice on the importance of keeping up their studies after they left college.

the students some sound advice on the importance of keeping up their studies after they left college.

The Hon. Mr. West presided as Vice-Chancellor at the Bombay Convocation. He, too, had the pleasure of welcoming a lady graduate—the first upon whom that University has conferred a degree—and he wished her all success. He said that he was struck by the recurrence of Mahomedan names in the list of the year's prizemen, and he looked upon this as a hopeful sign that the wave of education was reaching that community. Over 3,000 candidates, he remarked, had presented themselves for matriculation during the year, and the number who passed exceeded last year's number by 50 per cent number who passed exceeded last year's number by 50 per cent. Then after alluding to the foundation of new scholarships, and the want of a technological institution, he proceeded to make some remarks on the resolution of the Indian Government regarding discipline and moral training in schools and colleges. He quite agreed with so much of that resolution as insisted He quite agreed with so much of that resolution as insisted upon the proper training of teachers; but, as regarded so much of it as treated of discipline and recommended the compilation of a moral text-book, he thought experience had taught that these were not to be altogether relied on. The way to secure true ethical instruction was to put the student under good instructors—men of fine capacity and noble nature—such men as Mr. Green, one of the earliest pioneers of education in Bombay, Sir Alexander Grant, and Professor Wordsworth. He had little faith in any other method faith in any other method.

The complete collapse of the revolutionary movement in Nepaul is no longer doubtful. It is rumoured, not without some probability, that he is hiding in Calcutta.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 22.

The situation in Sikkim continues to be strained. The Rajah, it is true, has returned from Tibet, but he is residing at some distance from his capital of Tumlong, and is said to be surrounded by Tibetans, whose intrigues cause much jealousy among his own subjects. Meanwhile, the Tibetan force which entered Sikkim more than a year ago continues to occupy the fort which they built at Lingtu, on the road from Darjeeling to the Jelapla Pass. As this aggression on and interference with a feudatory State cannot be tolerated, representations have been sent to the Chinese Government, urging it to direct the Tibetans to withdraw from Sikkim and abstain from meddling with its affairs. meddling with its affairs.

As China never pretended to any authority over that State, doubtless she will comply with so reasonable a request. Should she fail to do so, or, as is not unlikely, should the Tibetans disregard her orders, then the Indian Government will probably itself expel the intruders—a task which can be easily accomplished, and which will hardly assume even the appearance of a military operation.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JAN. 22.

Further details have been received of the murderous attack on Colonel Little at Bhamo. As the Colonel was entering his bathroom at night his Madrassee servant cut him down from behind. When Little fell the servant wounded him again, and then bolted. The weapon used was Colonel Little's own and then bolted. The weapon used was Colonel Little's own dah. Both wounds are very serious, and one finger of the colonel's left hand was nearly severed while he was trying to protect himself from the second blow. The injured man succeeded in reaching the door and giving the alarm to the sentry, and the servant was found hiding in some long grass. He has confessed his crime, but gives no reason for committing

The last official bulletin as to Upper Burma is, on the whole, favourable. The larger dacoit bands are being broken up, and the improvement in the condition of the province continues. In the Myadway district a raid has been made by Kachyens, who committed a murder and carried of three women. In the same district there have been two other cases of dacoity with murder. The Mandalay town and district are reported to be murder. The Mandalay town and district are reported to be quiet. Dacoity is very prevalent in the Kyoukse and Tsagain districts. In Yemethen several dacoities in the lower Chindwin district. In Yemethen several dacoities have occurred, and a loyal village headman has been murdered by dacoits. In Toungdwingyee the military police have had a successful encounter with dacoits.

Owing to the difficulty of postal communication, intelligence from the Shan columns has hitherto been very scanty. I uller rom the Snan columns has nitherto been very scanty. Fuller nformation has now been received from the northern column. The troops were very hospitably received by the Thebaw Tsawbwa. This important chieftain, who rules the territory from which the ex-King of Burma took his title, has throughout been a warm supporter of British rule. He has had a curious career. Some years ago he incurred the hostility of the Mandalay Government, and had to flee into Lower Burma. While residing in Rangoon he shot two of his servants, believing them to be employed by the Burmese Government to murder him. He was arrested, tried for murder, and condemned to death. Fuller inquiries, however, caused the Government to take a different view of the case, and the Tsawbwa received a pardon and was kindly treated. When Thebaw was dethroned the Tsawbwa took possession of his principality, and at once declared in our favour. The assistance which he has rendered to the Government of India has been rewarded by a considerable concession of territory. The small tsawbwaships of Mainlung, Thonze, and Maintoy have been added to his principality, and he is now the most powerful of the Shantsawbwas. He recently asked the local Government to granthim, in addition to the territory already ceded, the tsawbwasthe Mandalay Government, and had to flee into Lower Burma. tsawbwas. It was not, how-ever, considered advisable to grant this request.

ever, considered advisable to grant this request.

From Thebaw the column proceeded to Toungbain. The ruler of Toungbain, who is very hostile to the Thebaw Tsawbwa, specially stipulated that none of the Thebaw mens should accompany the column. This request was complied with, and a friendly assurance was sent to him. As the column approached Toungbain on December 30th the road was found to be blocked with felled trees, and armed parties were seen hovering about. Major Yates, R.A., and Mr. Daly, political officer, accompanied by an interpreter, advanced to try and converse with them. Major Yates and Mr. Daly were fired on, and failed to open negotiations.

On December 31 the head and rear of the column and the centre of the baggage train were attacked simultaneously by centre of the baggage train were attacked simultaneously by bodies of men concealed in the densest jungle. One driver was badly wounded, and a number of mules were killed and wounded. On January 1 an advance party, under Captain Yate (so well known in connection with the Afghan Boundary Commission), reached Toungbain. The Tsawbwa and his officials had fled on the previous night, and a body of Phoongyees, officials had fied on the previous night, and a body of Phoongyees, occupying a large monastery in the town, were seen escaping as the column approached. Major Yates and Mr. Daly proceeded after them alone, and, by patient diplomacy, succeeded in getting the Phoongyees to return to the town. Up to January 4 the Tsawbwa had not come in, although he had opened negotiations with Mr. Daly, and declared that he was not responsible for the attack on the troops, which had been made by dacoits. The Toungbain Tsawbwa will probably be dethroned. The column will proceed northwards from Toung bain to Theianni, and thence will march to the Salwen river.

The Chief Commissioner is still in Upper Burma.

WOOD PAVEMENT FOR INDIA. (Times of India.)

What Bombay wants, in its principal thoroughfares at least, s a wood pavement such as we see in London, Paris, and the big American cities. Chicago has been making great advances big American cities. Chicago has been making great advances in this line lately, having now as much as 200 miles of wood pavement. We have a wood that would do excellently for the purpose, as far as can be guessed without actual trial, and is not very expensive. Babool would, we are told, be just the wood for the purpose, and it would pay the Municipality to make a trial of Babool block pavement in a small piece of much-frequented thoroughfare to decide its fitness for paving purposes, any other likely woods being tried at the same time. It is curious that this system of road paving, which was first tried round hospitals to deaden the sound, and used to be put round hospitals by rich benefactors for this purpose, and was considered as a munificent donation, should be found to be the most suitable and economical pavement in the world for heavy most suitable and economical pavement in the world for heavy traffic, besides being pleasant to drive on and less affected by water than any other form. Water works holes in the best macadam in the world, and yet it runs off a properly-prepared and well-laid wood pavement as off a duck's back, and does no harm at all. It is, of course, necessary to have properly seasoned wood, to lay it at a dry season of the year and to steep or rather boil each block in a preparation of tar so as to properly soak and waterproof it, but this is all done on the spot, the blocks being cut to the proper size at the saw mills, and boiled and fitted in situ. Bombay with wood paved thoroughfares, and Bombay as it is now, would be two different places. We have only to think of a city without dust in the dry weather, without mud and slush in the wet, a city where the horses would not tire easily, and their feet as well as the springs and wheels of your carriages would not be tried so much, to recognise what a change would most suitable and economical pavement in the world for heavy be effected. The traffic round the offices in the Fort would be noiseless and the comfortable smooth drive in the evening free from dust and rust and bumps. Once laid, the pockets of the ratepayers would be relieved, for a wood pavement is less costly to keep than a macadamized road, if both are properly done. Of course there must be a proper foundation of sand, which could be got for the carriage (or possibly the rocky bed would be sufficient), and the blocks must be laid the proper way. The surface when laid would be covered with a light coating of gravel, but there would be nothing fine enough to give off much dust, and the gravel would quickly work into the wood and the spaces between the blocks, leaving the surface just smooth enough for traffic.

CAVALRY AND MOUNTED INFANTRY IN BURMA. (Madras Mail.)

I do not know if it has been definitely settled to keep per manently cavalry in Burma, but if it is, it will come very hard on the regiments selected for service there; and if it be a regiment on the Silledar system, it will go far towards ruining its "Chunda" fund. The regiments which are now in Burma have lost, during the last year, more than half their strength in horses. The figures in losses up to the end of this year will probably be:—3rd Cavalry Hyderabad Contingent, 350; 1st Madras Lancers, 275; 7th Bengal Cavalry, 220; and 1st Bombay Lancers, 200. Government will, it is presumed, give some compensation for the loss of these horses, but it will probably not be more than Rs. 200 a horse; and as most regiments have to pay Rs. 350 to Rs. 400 for their remounts, the loss to the "Chunda" fund will be enormous, and even at Rs. 200 a horse the expense to be borne by the State will be over two lakhs. The good work done by these regiments cannot be exaggerated, but it is doubtful whether the time for cavalry in Burma has not gone by. Cavalry may get a chance now and again at dacoits manently cavalry in Burma, but if it is, it will come very hard gone by. Cavalry may get a chance now and again at dacoits when they are bolting across the few open fields round jungle villages, but, as a rule now, no dacoit if he hears of cavalry within fifty miles of him will dare to show his nose outside the very thick jungle. The good work already done by Mounted Infantry in the jungle leads one to suppose that an extended system of Mounted Infantry might, for the future, do their own and the cavalry work. The Mounted Infantry, as it stands now, is made up of volunteers from different regiments, British and Native, and is armed with the long rifle and bayonet. Most of the men, before joining, have little or no knowledge of horses, and none of riding. Consequently, for the first two or three months, although able to travel long distances at a slow pace, they are not of much use in galloping to surround a village or camp. At the end of three months, when the men are beginning to get useful, several have got tired of gone by. Cavalry may get a chance now and again at dacoits surround a village or camp. At the end of three months, when the men are beginning to get useful, several have got tired of the hard work, and wish to return; others also have gone sick, and fresh volunteers take their place. Thus, in each company, there are always a certain number of men with very uncertain seats, who hinder the rest when any rapid movement has to be executed. Now, for the extension of the system, all the regiments of the Madras Cavalry now in India are very considerably below their strength in horses, from having to supply drafts of trained horses to the 1st Madras Lancers, and, apparently, the Government at present is unable to find a sufficient number of suitable horses to replace them. The evil might be remedied by one of the Madras Cavalry regiments being sent over with its arms and accoutrements, but leaving its horses and over with its arms and accoutrements, but leaving its horses and saddlery behind to be drafted into other regiments to make up their deficiencies. The selected regiment should then, on arrival in Burma, be supplied with Burman ponies and saddlery to fit them, and being armed with carbines (which can be carried on the back) and swords, they would when meeting deceits in the the back) and swords, they would when meeting dacoits in the open, be able to cut them down with their swords, and use open, be able to cut them down with their swords, and use their carbine in the jungle; and, by being all able to ride, would get about the country quicker than the Mounted Infantry. And their ponies, by being properly groomed, and looked after, would stand more work. At the end of a year the Police will probably be able to keep the country quiet, and the regiment could then return to India, the Government, in the meantime, having been able to pick up enough horses to remount them on their return. The presented Mounted Infantry might also having been able to pick up enough horses to remount them on their return. The presented Mounted Infantry might also, with advantage, be re-armed, and by keeping nothing but Burman ponies in Burma, the present loss in horses, and consequent expense to the State, would be avoided. If a whole regiment could not well be spared, detachments of fifty men under a British officer from ten or twelve Bengal and Bombay Cavalry regiments would answer the purpose just as well; and, instead of loss, the Government and "Chunda" Funds would gain, and the work would be carried on as well, if not better, than at present.

One who Knows.

OPENINGS FOR OFFICERS. (Times of India.)

We may touch briefly on some of the minor openings for young fellows who feel cramped by regimental duty. He may be inclined to enter the Pay Department, fired with a noble ambition to have a little office of his own, and to spend his days in retrenching other people's pay and allowances. Officers of the army have a light-hearted way of drawing extra pay whenever they think they are entitled to it. The officers of the Pay Department do their best to check this light-heartedness by retrenching the said extra pay and causing the recipient of it to engage in a long and desperate contest with, them before he finally gets it. Sport of this kind, no doubt, has many attractions, and must make many wish to join the department. Indeed, it must be admitted, though the fact is not generally recognised, that one great characteristic of the Pay Department is a certain pleasant sportiveness in its dealings with the military public. It is impossible to read many of those quaint jests termed "objection statements," without being forcibly struck by the strong sense of humour displayed in drawing them up. Some of them are irresistibly droll. We need not say anything more to-day about the Judge Advocate's Department as an opening for a promising young officer. A Judge Advocate should not be young. He should be at least middle-aged, should look as wise as he possibly can, and convey the impression that he is always thinking out problems of military law. Of course if he actually does know a little about it so much the better, but this need not be insisted on. The Commissariat Department is the last on our list. It may be termed "the great misunderstood." It is looked down upon because it provides the British soldier with beef and jack-sepoy with ghee. Its senior members leap-frog over each other's heads, and many strange things happen. But really for anyone who wishes to marry and lead a quiet life, the Commissariat Department may be confidently recommended. The up-country Commissariat officer who has a good office is quite an enviable person. He is his own master, and the sole disturbers of his peace are choleric Commanding Officers who find fault with his beef, and battery horses that turn up their

THE SIND DELHI LINE. · (Bombay Gazette.)

The discussion of the abortive project for connecting Sind with Delhi by a line from Hyderabad to Pachpadra has brought into view an existing line, the experience of which must be of considerable value wherever a cheap railway is needed, and wherever true economy does not forbid the cutting down of the initial expenditure to a minimum. No one has assumed that the Jodhpore line in its present condition would serve as a link in a line carrying heavy traffic, and if it were ever to perform the part that the Kurrachee scheme has assigned it a large outlay would be necessary. But the line was constructed for local traffic, and for the purpose for which it was designed it succeeds admirably. The total length of the system is 124 miles, of which sixty-four are run from Marwar Junction on the Rajputana Railway to Jodhpore, the remaining sixty constituting a branch which runs from Luni to Pachpadra. The future of he line is its cheapness of construction and management. Including rolling stock, total cost of the line averages only Rs.18,500 a mile—the lowest rate but one amongst the Native State Railways, the lowest being the Wadhwan-Morvi, which cost about Rs.14,000 a mile. The working of the line has so far been exceedingly profitable, notwithstanding that it ruhs through a land by no means flowing with milk and honey. It is, in its way, and with its earnings so far averaging ten per cent., a model line. But it can only be copied where the local conditions which have favoured cheap construction prevail, and it cannot be pointed to as a pattern for universal imitation.

THE FRONTIER AND BURMA MEDAL. (Pioneer.)

We have before noticed the petty policy of obstruction at home which has vetoed the grant of a separate medal for the conquest of Upper Burma; and we are constrained again to urge that yet a last effort should be made by the Government of India to secure this well-earned reward for the troops. It is not the grant of a distinctive medal, even though a country nearly as large as France has been added to the Empire; it is simply the bestowal of that frontier medal which so many of our soldiers already wear for small expeditions across the border. A clasp only notifies that service had been done in Upper Burma. Now, if there is one thing which serves to make the Native army popular among the classes from which it is recruited it is the chance of a medal. The veterans in the ranks wear those badges of distinction with a pride which only those who know them well can appreciate; when they doff their uniform, and go on leave to their homes, they hang their medals round their necks, and by the display of these marks of Bahaduri win many a good recruit to the service. They understand but little the value of a clasp; another medal, another bit of ribbon, is what they appreciate. Many men in the regiments that have aided in conquering and pacifying Upper Burma have already won the frontier medal, and they are undoubtedly suffering from keen disappointment in having simply a clasp added to those they already wear. If a special medal is not to be given for such good work as the Indian Army have done in Burma we fail to see under what circumstances it can be greated at all to the control of the contro good work as the Indian Army have done in Burma we fail to see under what circumstances it can be granted at all. There may not have been pitched battles or the moving of many thousand men into individual actions; but the record of real hard marching and fighting in the most trying of all warfare, that carried on in guerilla fashion, is difficult to beat. There is no question of cost involved: the medals have to be issued in any case, and all that is needed is the striking of a new die. The Calcutta Mint is now busy coining the Frontier Medal: if a new die were given it could equally well turn out a Burma medal. It is not too late even now to make the change: the medal. It is not too late even now to make the change: the Frontier medal already struck will not be wasted, for we can-Frontier medal already struck will not be wasted, for we cannot be said to have passed the stage in which no expeditions are likely to be sent across our borders. If further representations are made from India, and if public opinion at home can only be brought to bear on the question, we do not despair of a just recognition of the service done in Upper Burma. If, however, a new die is refused, why should not the old medal be issued with a new ribbon? This would be better than nothing, and it would certainly show some small appreciation of the true merits of the case. It would really seem that the Indian Army has no friends at home: even the recent honours list was only passed in its amended form after great pressure had been brought to bear upon the authorities at the War Office. ~Office.

PROGRESS IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

(Times of India.)

The progress made in these provinces in the direction of cal self-government has been remarkable. Sir Richard local self-government has been remarkable. Sir Richard Temple commenced the work of associating the people in the public administration by appointing chiefs and respectable members of the community as honorary magistrates, by nomi-nating and gazetting local committees for all districts, and by encouraging the formation of municipal bodies. now in the provinces (excluding the feudatories and semi-independent Zemindars) ninety-eight honorary magistrates and fifty-eight municipal committees, while in almost every district there is a local council managing its own affairs with little direct official interference from outside. Great life and little direct official interference from outside. Great life and energy is being displayed by the gentlemen who constitute these local bodies, and the usefulness of the work they are doing will be still further increased when a general plan of operations is laid down and expenditure is more systematised. It is noticeable that a general disposition is shown to spend money too freely on schools, the report in this connection mildly remarking that "nothing is more popular with the influential classes than a gratuituous education at the public expense." The successful working of the Municipal Committees was summoned up in an official document, dated February last, in the following eulogistic terms:—"The Municipal administration of the year has been in many ways satisfactory. There has been an improved representation of the people; there has been a larger expenditure on matters connected with the public health and convenience; more liberal grants have been made to schools and to education generally; improved and revised octroi schedules are almost everywhere in force; there has been a considerable improvements the administration of stepsi with the public health and convenience. generally; improved and revised octrol schedules are almost everywhere in force; there has been a considerable improvement in the administration of octrol, evinced at once by the increased amount paid away in refunds and by the closer approach to standards of consumption." Altogether the claim put forward in the report now before us that "the Central Provinces (backward though they may be in many respects) stand now in the very forefront of the provinces of India in this matter of local safe government," appears to be fully subthis matter of local self-government," appears to be fully substantiated, both by the facts and figures relating to the past official year and by the general record of progress throughout the different districts.

RAILWAY EXTENSION IN HIS HIGHNESS THE NIZAM'S STATE.

 $(Hyderabad\ Record.)$

We have just heard that the official inspection of the line of railway from Warangal to Dornakal, fifty-three miles in length, and the mineral branch of the line from Dornakal to the Sinand the mineral branch of the line from Dornakal to the Singarenni Coal Fields, being an addition of sixteen miles, in all sixty-miles has been concluded, and the entire length has been pronounced as being fit for traffic. The inspection party consisted of Colonel C. S. Smith, R.E., Consulting Engineer Madras Government, Mr. Furnivall, Agent and Chief Engineer H.H. the N.G. State Railway Company, Mr. T. H. Hughes, of the Geological Survey Department of the Government of India, Mr. Pendlebury, the traffic manager, Mr. Moles worth, the engineer in charge of construction works, Messrs Martin and Dunlop and others, having been fully satisfied with the working of the line on both the branches. We believe that the opening of these two branches for public pelieve that the opening of these two branches for public traffic will take place about the beginning of next month, and the usual ceremonies will be gone through on the occasion, as was done when the line was opened up to Warrangal about the commencement of 1886. Orders for the construction of the extension from Warrangal to Dorna! kal, and for the mineral branch to the Singarenni Coalfields were received in April or May 1886, and active operations were undertaken shortly afterwards. Land for the lines were acquired in June, and earthworks were commenced operations were undertaken shortly afterwards. Land for the lines were acquired in June, and earthworks were commenced in July following. During the autumn, fever, dysentery and an epidemic of ulcers or severe boils, afflicted the working gangs so sorely that the works for a time were almost suspended and progress, which seemed to have been secured at first start, had been greatly retarded towards the latter part of the half-year. Most of the country traversed by this section of the line is covered with dense jungles, and is deficient in food supplies. Although only fair progress has been made with earthworks and collection of materials towards the close of the half-year, a beginning was made with plate-laying from the Warrangal end to Dornakal and to the Singarenni Coalfields, and the entire length of the two lines aggregating sixty-nine miles, notwithstanding the exceptional difficulties the working parties had to contend with it new ready for public treffic.

had to contend with, is now ready for public traffic; the construction having occupied about twenty months.

The opening of this line must be considered as the dawn of a new era on the territories of his Highness, from which the industrial development of the State will be reckoned for the future. The Singarenni coal fields have now been reached, and to some little extent extent weeked. to some little extent actually worked. As was anticipated, the quality of the coal and the extent of the fields have more than to some little extent actually worked. As was anticipated, the quality of the coal and the extent of the fields have more than proved the estimate formed of them by Mr. Hughes, whose first report we had the pleasure to publish some time ago in detail. The coal has been pronounced to be of exceptionally good quality, and though none of them have been up to date used in the locomotive engines they have been utilised in the mining engines, and were found to burn exceedingly well. The coalfields themselves have proved to be larger in extent than was anticipated. There would in this case be a very active demand for this coal springing up on all the railway lines in Southern India, including the South Mahratta line, in a very short time, and the further opening of the line from Dornakal to the frontier of his Highness's territories, which will be a distance of 54\frac{1}{2}$ miles, will give a still greater impetus to this industry. The portion from the British side in the Madras Presidency, we hear, is being pushed on most vigorously, and there is every probability of the present short break on this side being soon linked with the Southern Presidency. We intended entering into several of the other advantages which are certain to result from this extension irrespective of those which might be reasonably expected when the line from Warwhich might be reasonably expected when the line from Warrangal to the Chanda coal fields shall have been constructed, but we find the time and space at our disposal will not permit

THE British Budian Association has addressed a letter to the Supreme Government urging that the time has arrived when Government may be asked to consider whether the people of the country should not be admitted to a larger share in the work of administration, and whether the powers of non-official additional Members of Council may not be advantageously enlarged and defined.

THE Civil Service dinner at Calcutta on the 29th Dec. was presided over by Justice Prinsep as Senior Member. Lieutenant-Governor was also present. It was far more numerously attended than its promoters expected when first arranging for it. Not only Bengal, but all the other Provinces were represented by distinguished Civilians in the higher grades of the Service.

AT a meeting of the members of the Garth Memorial Committee on the 29th Dec., it was resolved that the Executive Committee should be requested to apply to the Judges of the High Court for permission to place a portrait of Sir Richard Garth in some prominent place in the High Court. It was also decided to ask the Chief Justice to preside at the unveiling ceremony.

It is reported that the Committee of the new Club at Simla are undecided whether Bentinck Castlet or Gorton Castle shall be purchased for the club premises. The Morning Post believes it was first intended to buy Laurie's Hotel, which is splendidly situated, and would certainly make a club second to none in India. The owners were prepared to sell for a comparatively moderate sum, and it is difficult to understand with the idea of obtaining the prepared was absoluted. why the idea of obtaining the property was abandoned

THE Englishman remarks that one of the reforms under the new Calcutta Municipal Bill will probably be the separation of the offices of chairman of the municipality and chief commissioner of police. Representations in favour of the change are going forward from the Bengal Chamber of Commence, the Defence Association, the Trades' Association, and the Anglo-Indian Association. The two offices are separated in Bombay, and it is difficult to see that there is any important advantage in the present dual arrangement.

Nor long ago the Behar Mounted Volunteers were being exercised at Mozufferpore, and were divided into an attacking and a defending force. The latter were dispersed, and shortly after the former were despached to search for and attack the latter, who, however, were not easily found. A bright idea, however, struck the attacking force. They opined the defenders were a thirsty lot, and they thereupon made straight for the club, where, sure enough, they found the whole of the defending force.

MADRAS. THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

MADRAS, DEC. 28.

The National Congress proceedings commenced to-day with a meeting at which all the delegates and many visitors were present. Sir Madava Rao presided provisionally, and delivered present. Sir Madava Rao presided provisionally, and delivered an address, after which he called upon the Congress to elect a President. Mr. W. C. Bonnerji, the Calcutta barrister, proposed (the Hon. Subramania Iyer, a Madras lawyer, seconded, and Raja Rampal Singh, supported the motion) that the Hon. Budruddin Tyabji be elected. The proposal was carried unanimously. The President then delivered an address, and a Committee was appointed to prepare a programme for the sittings which commence from to morrow. sittings which commence from to-morrow.

The principal business before the National Congress to-day was the appointment of a committee to frame rules for the constitution and working of the Congress, and the passing of constitution and working of the Congress, and the passing of a resolution re-affirming the necessity for the expansion and reform of legislative councils. This was proposed by Babu Surendranath Bannerjee, seconded by Sir Madava Rao and supported by Mr. Eardley Norton, Mr. Sabapathy Moodelliar, a Madras merchant, Mr. Gantz, a barrister, and Raja Rampel

The first named delegate criticised the recent letter published by Mr. Beck, and Mr. Eardley Norton condemned Sir Lepel Griffin's late remarks, and said he had falsified the traditions of every man who calls himself an Englishman.

Mr. Eardley Norton also advised constant agitation in

To-day's meeting was attended by four local Rajas and several Civil Servants.

The first resolution submitted advocated immediate steps for the separation of the executive and judicial functions of Government. One of the Bengali supporters of the motion condemned a section of the Vernacular Press and was immediately not be benefit to be seen to be seen the local character of the product of the product of the vernacular press and was immediately not be seen to be seen t mediately met by loud shouts of dissension, whereupon he concluded his remarks.

The editor of the Indian Mirror proposed a resolution advocating the establishment of military colleges by Government in this country, whereat sons of noblemen and gentlemen permanently resident in India may be trained for a military career in the Indian Army. An amendment was carried stating the desire bility of the Overn's Proplemation being given effect. the desirability of the Queen's Proclamation being given effect to, whereby the military services and other branches should be practically open to Natives.

The next resolution urged the Government to authorise a system of volunteering for the inhabitants of India.

DEC. 31.

This morning the Congress commenced by passing a resolution urging that the Government be moved to elaborate a system of technical education suitable to the condition of the country, and to encourage indigenous manufactures by a more strict observance of the orders already existing in regard te utilising such manufactures for State purposes, and to employ more extensively than at present the skill and talents of the people of the country.

The next resolution created considerable debate. It was proposed by Sabapathy Moodelliar of Bellary, and suggested that, in view of the loyalty of the people, the hardship which it causes, and the unmerited slur which it casts upon the people of this country, the Congress is of opinion that the present Arms Act should be repealed. This was seconded by Bipen Chundes Pol of Lohordes.

An amendment said to be more practicable was proposed, and found a considerable number of supporters. The amendment was vigorously attacked by Surendra Nath Bannerjee and the Rev. Kali Churn Bannerjee, the result being that after a conference between the persons who had spoken on either side the following resolution was adopted:—"That, in view of the loyalty of the people, the hardships which it causes, and the unmerited slurit casts upon the people of this country, the Government be moved so to modify the provisions of Chapter 4, and, if necessary, any other portions of Act II. of 1878, as shall enable all persons to wear arms unless debarred therefrom either as individuals or as members of particular communities, for reasons to be recorded in writing and duly published."

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS BAKER has returned to Allahabad from Calcutta, and resumed command of the Allahabad Division.

THE Rajahs of Mandi, Chamba, and Bilaspore have lately been visiting the Rajah of Kapurthala, and have enjoyed some good shooting in the preserves around Sultanpore.

THE first report of the wheat and oilseed crops of the North Western Provinces and Oudh, which is up to 10th December, 1887, is as follows:—"Autumn rains continuous; ploughing less, and sowings rather late. Germination good, and prospects on the whole fairly promising. Area much about the same as last year.

THE ashes of the late Maharajah Scindia were formally consigned to the Ganges at Allahabad on the 28th December, the ceremony being marked by the firing of twenty-one minute guns from the fort. A richly-caparisoned white horse and an elephant wearing a silver necklace worth ten thousand rupees are said to be the portion of the priests who conducted the religious ceremonies on the occasion.

THE prices of grain in the North-West Provinces and beyond are fast rising to a famine level—wheat to 9 seers, and gram to 14 seers, for the rupee; a month ago gram was at 25 seers. Worse still, bajra, which averages 30 seers, has risen to 14 seers, and this pinches the very poorest.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY.

There is no greater proof of the vitality of this veteran company than the vigour with which it appears to be entering upon the present year, from which its new mail contracts to India, China, and Australia date. These contracts commence in February, and the occasion has been taken advantage of to remodel all the services. The public nowadays demand greater facilities and greater comforts for travel than contented them formerly, and this demand has been met by vast improvements in all directions. The mail services the Government has decided shall still be carried on by way of Brindisi; and, the route through the Suez Canal being selected, there will no longer be any transhipments or railway transit across Egypt, which formerly were so annoying to travellers, neither will there be a recurrence of the vexatious delays and inconveniences to which they were at times subjected by the action of the sanitary authorities in regard to the imposition of quarantine in Egypt. Every Monday morning the letters from the East will be delivered as heretofore, and letters for the East will be despatched, as at present, on pany than the vigour with which it appears to be entering and letters from the East will be despatched, as at present, on every Friday evening. But the conveyance of the mails to India, China, Australia, and the British possessions in the East is only a portion of the operation carried on by the P. and O. Company; and the directors have not been content to confine their services to communications with the East from London or Brindisi, but have also notified extensions from London to Marseilles and Naples, and from Marseilles, Naples, and Brindisi to all parts included in their Eastern system. They are also opening a service from Brindisi to Malta, which will bring this station within eighty-seven hours of London.

At the present time the P. and O. Company owns 53 steamers, with an aggregate registered tonnage of 204,183 tons and 198,500 horse-power, built at a cost of some £6,000,000. Their largest steamers are of 6,500 tons register, and the smallest 2,000 tons. In the course of the coming year no fewer than 200 of their steamers, of an aggregate tonnage of nearly 1,000,000 tons, will enter and leave the port of London along 1,000,000 tons, will enter and leave the port of London alone. The steamers traverse 2,500,000 miles in the course of a year. The company gives employment to 800 officers (commanders, officers, engineers, surgeons, &c.) of the mercantile marine holding certificates from the Board of Trade, and a large proportion have Her Majesty's Commission in the Royal Naval Reserve. It has also in its service an army of nearly 15,000 people afloat and ashore. Great as its resources and operations are, the company has many competitors, and although its main operations are directed towards the carriage of mails and passengers, the competition of the cheap class of cargo steamers with limited passenger accommodation, which have lately been built, has forced the company to extend its branches, and of late it has established a network of agencies throughout the country.—From the Times, Jan. 18, 1888.

AFGHAN NEWS. THE AMIR'S ALLIANCES.

Some excitement prevails in Northern Afghanistan owing to the rumour that the Amir is coming to Jalalabad in order to make arrangements for the marriage of his sons, one with the daughter of the Khan of Lalpura, and the other with the daughter of the Khan of Asmar or of the Khan of the Mungal tribe. From Asmar itself a correspondent writes that the Mehter of Chitral is also anxious to marry his own son to the same daughter of the Khan of Asmar, and the vakils of both sides are at present at Asmar for the purpose, while the Khan of Asmar is himself at Chitral.

The Chiefs of Bajour as well as the people of Kafiristan—the neighbours of Asmar on both sides, that is to say—are meanneighbours of Asmar on both sides, that is to say—are mean-while urging the Khan of Asmar not to give his daughter to the son of the present Amir of Cabul, who, they say, is a man of violently bad temper, and will probably soon be turned out of Cabul, when his sons will have to beg from door to door. The people of Kafiristan also profess to believe that the present Amir of Cabul intends to carry all the women of Kafiristan off to Kabul. With regard to the other matrimonial intentions to Kabul. With regard to the other matrimonial intentions attributed to Abdurrahman, it is stated that he desires to marry his son with the daughter of the Khan of Lalpura in order to establish his position after the manner of the late Amir Shere Ali Khan, who married his two sons, Ayub Khan and Yakub Khan, in the same house.

Although Akbar Khan of Lalpura is pleased with the offered alliance his subjects are not, for they are of the common opinion that Amir Abdurrahman Khan is of bad temper, and they prophesy all kinds of misfortunes to Akbar Khan if he they prophesy all kinds of misfortunes to Akbar Khan if he enters into close relations with him. They insist, too, that the friendship of the present Amir of Cabul cannot be of any use to them—the Maiwand tribes. Our correspondent adds his own opinion that the Khan of Lalpura and the Khan of the Mungal tribe will be glad to marry their daughters with the sons of the Amir, but that the Khan of Asmar will not do so.

CONTINUED FIGHTING.

For the last two months the people of Khudoo Khel, south of the Boner country, have been fighting with each other. The cause of their quarrel was the question of banishing and turning out Mokurab Khan, who was too old to govern.

THE RUSSIANS AT KARKI.

A force of Russians with five officers have arrived at Karki in order to find out the places where the river is hardest frozen, and they have brought with them an ice plough. Every effort is made to secure the comfort of the officers, and their tents are made of sheep skins.

WEATHER IN THE PASSES.

The pass of Kotal Dara betweed Chitral and Dir is closed up by ice. Travellers pass it with great difficulty.

THE HOSTILE SHINWARIS.

It is reported from Jalalabad that as the Amir of Cabul is said to be coming to Jalalabad the people of the Shinwari tribe are making arrangements for resisting him. They say that if the Amir wishes to fight with them, there will be no backwardness on their part at any time, and that the present is a good opportunity.

A CARAVAN PLUNDERED.

Rahim Khan, the son of Dadoo of the Kurd Khel tribe, has plundered a caravan (between Kurma and Logar) which was going to Banu. He has looted winter goods to the value of Rs. 6,000.

NARROW ESCAPE OF NUR MAHOMED.

Six days ago some Shias, who are all strong allies of the Amir of Cabul, attacked the famous rebel Nur Mahomed Khan, son of Sardar Wali Mahomed Khan.

Had the people of Tira not come to his assistance, Nur Mahomed would not have escaped.

The people of Dara Ali Shah and of Ali Gur who have revolted from the Amir of Cabul have plundered the goods of the Amir at Noman. Four out of them were, however, seized and have been brought to Jalalabad.—From Native Correspondents of the Civil and Military Gavette.

Few more remarkable men have ever flourished than William Carey. Born in the humblest sphere of life, he raised himself from the rank of a cobbler to a position of dignity which, viewed merely from the standpoint of fame, might well have satisfied the most ambitious of mortals, the most aspiring of men. Every one is familiar with his story as regards his later years—how he founded the Serampore Mission, destined in the fulness of time to spread abroad the Scriptures in well-nigh every dialect in India; but there are many points of interest which are not, perhaps, equally well known. Few persons probably are aware that the Serampore Press was conducted by three persons, Carey, Marsham, and Ward, who lived with a community of goods on the strict apostolic system—fewer, perhaps, that these excellent worthies made their own transla-Few more remarkable men have ever flourished than William perhaps, that these excellent worthies made their own translations, cut their own type, prepared their own paper; and we venture to assert still fewer amongst the ordinary public are alive to the fact that from first to last these three individuals, in the persons of themselves and their families, contributed towards this enterprise the magnificent sum of £90,000—Carey himself, heading the list with a contribution of no less than £45,000! He passed away penniless—not a rupee had been saved during the labours of forty years; but his memory will remain to the end of time as the most unselfish, most liberal of the sons which England has ever consecrated to the noble cause of missionary enterprise.

But William Carey did more than this. He founded the first newspaper started in India, still known to fame as the Friend of India. He founded the Horticultural Society, while for a number of years he acted as Bengali, Marathi, and Sanskrit translator to the Government of India. He was, too, the "Father of the Second Reformation through Foreign Missions." Not only did he himself labour for years at the work of converting the heathen, but he lived to see the modest sum of £13 2s. 6d., which was collected under his auspices at Kettering, in Northamptonshire, swelled to the annual total of £400,000; and were he still in the flesh he would glory in the magnificent sight of no less than two and a half millions expended every year in missions to the heathen. He would learn that the solitary missionary had been succeeded by a band of 7,000 workers in this good cause. He would find converts in India alone to the extent of two-thirds of a million, and in all the lands outside the pale of Christendom to the number of three millions. He would count the sales of Bibles, and be enabled to boast that they have reached 220 millions of Father of the Second Reformation through Foreign Mis-copies in 340 tongues and languages! He would gather that "the Bengali School of Mudnaqati, the Christian College of Serampore, have set in motion in educational forces that are bringing nations to the birth, are passing under Bible instruction every day more than 400,000 boys and girls, young men and maidens, of the dark races of mankind." He would rejoice to find that his efforts to spread the Gospel amidst the heathen —a work of which he was the pioneer—is now taken up by the London Missionary Society, the Edinburgh and Glasgow Societies, the Church Missionary Society, the London Society, the American Baptist Union, the Religious Tract Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, to say nothing of a host of German, Dutch, and American kindred bodies.

German, Dutch, and American kindred bodies.

What a grand, what a superb harvest from the one solitary grain sown in faith by William Carey, the cobbler, whose life is given with plain, unvarnished simplicity by Dr. Smith, of the Friend of India celebrity. The story of such a noble and disinterested career cannot be too often read, too frequently cited, as an incentive to pious exertion and devout labour. That this happy consummation is to some extent realised is indicated by the appearance of this, the second edition of a most attractive and valuable biography of one of India's greatest heroes.

"No man," says Dr. Hill, "has ever held the same place as who, though dead, still speaks in tones which never fail to attract attention and command respect. True, he was an aggregate of "contradictory qualities"—true, no one could tell what he would say, yet everyone could predict what he would do. "Here there were no wanderings, no strayings to one side or to the other! There was the straight gate, there was the narrow path leading to it. The gate he kept ever in view, and along the narrow path he doggedly plodded his way." He was never afraid to speak the truth—he was utterly indifferent to the conventionalities of society; with him cant was an unknown vice, and hypocrisy a fault which never entered his thoughts; with him innocence was a part of self. Amidst all these virtues it is but small dispraise to state that his mind was "waiting in fancy and imagination—that it is insensible to the arts of the musician and the painter, and is little open to the beauties of nature." No one is free from faults, and perhaps Johnson's greatest claim to national recognition is that he was a thorough Englishman in all his ways; in him the virtues and the vices of an insular people were reflected with unconcealed truthfulness. He never "lived in a mist, nor did he ever try for a single moment to throw one round him."

he ever try for a single moment to throw one round him."

It is only remains to add that the selections made by Dr.

Hill are most judicious, as tending to show the worthy Doctor's views in regard to the leading matters of everyday existence; and as they are all catalogued and alphabetically arranged, the reader can turn with ease to any particular subject which may nterest him most. An admirable task has been admirably performed, and Dr. Hill's work should find a niche in the home of everyone who can appreciate sterling integrity of character, entire fearlessness of speech, and spotless uprightness of life.

A GHOST OF THE PAST.+

This story opens well, with a graphic account of a good old-fashioned merry Christmas, and here and there are some interesting and touching episodes; as, for example, the Church scenes (chapters 3 to 5), the poor old man's love of music, especially the organ he used to play in early days before the icy hand of sorrow had chilled his marrow and wrecked his soul. The work is suited for an odd hour or so in a railway carriage, when few persons are perhaps unusually critical, and matters little what is left on the carriage seat in the way of it light literature light literature.

THE BALLAD OF HADJI, AND OTHER POEMS.*

There are some pretty verses amongst this collection, but they are sweet rather than grand; charming rather than magnificent. As an example :

"Oh! flowers, when I gaze on you and drink Your liquid perfumes thrilling in the wind, You have a power lent you to unlink
Those clasps of clay which keep my spirit blind.
Then, sometimes then, despairing Death and Sin,
My soul, half conscious, glances out afar
Through the close web our finite senses spin,
To veil from us who, what, or whence we are.

Once again we are tempted to quote:-

"Dreaming sad dreams of might have been, Round me gaily rings the jest,
With seeming zest I laugh my best,
But I sigh the more in my thoughts unseen.
Again, once again, I meet you:
Ah, the price such memories may cost! A summer so short, then unending frost The lightning's golden flash, their midnight's hue."

From "one learn all," says the old classical adage. Mr. Hamilton probably does not aim very high in his poetic effusions, but what he has done is pretty and attractive.

JUVENAL IN PICCADILLY.+

A very cleverly-written and sharp, stinging satire touching upon the cant, humbug, and hypocrisy of the present day. None escape, and the author shows up the shams and trans parencies of all and everyone. Society is "roasted."

THE MAHOMEDANS IN INDIA.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN's speech, about which so much comment has been made in English and Indian newspapers, has produced, as we expected it would do, a sympathetic response from one or more of the classes to whom he addressed himself. He, no doubt, expected as much too, for he is not a man incapable of weighing the value of words, especially when spoken in India by an Indian official. It is, of course, an open question for dispute whether he showed the tact which is expected from every official serving under the Government of India, in giving his opinions so freely regarding the character of that English product of forced education—the Bengali Babú; but all who have any experience of India, and especially of Bengal, must allow that his words were words of truth, however inconveniently uttered. My Uncle Toby's oath cannot be justified on the strictest grounds of moral propriety, yet the world has consented to believe with his biographer, that the tear of the Recording Angel blotted it out for ever. Sir Lepel Griffin may not have so accommodating a guardian regarding his utterances, but yet his worst nemy or angel will hardly accuse him of untruth in his description of the Bengali Babus in their relation to the stronger races of India. He may have been indiscreetin a Government point of view—in so freely, as a Government official, expressing his opinions; but they were opinions; which the Government of India ought long ago to have been convinced of as being correct, although no official might have the courage of confessing so. Therefore, in spite of his official sin, we hold that Sir Lepel Griffin's speech has had a beneficial effect. There are philosophers who have said that out of every evil some go od comes. Of course. the evil of an officer under the Government of India boldly and blankly telling the truth of his convictions in that country is, according to official canons, an unpardonable sin, but with this measure of condemnation the general public has nothing to do. Sir Lepel Griffin has wisely or unwisely told the Government a perhaps very unpalatable truth-namely, that it has fostered at the expense of better, manlier, and more loyal races a race of weakkneed, weak-minded syco phants-ungrateful and disloyal, and who would be powerless in the hour of danger to put out even a helping hand to save their own homes. Owing everything to British protection, the Bengali Babús of today are using the English education and ideas which they have gratuitously received, for the purpose of bringing English rule into contempt with their fellow-countrymen.

England is the greatest Mahomedan power in the world, and it is well that the Mahomedans in India should understand that there is no intention on the part of Englishmen to place them under the feet of a race inferior to them in every particular except that of an intellectual capacity of quickly acquiring a certain veneer of Western learning and political ideas. The policy of the Government of India for years past in pampering the Hindus of the flabby order of the Bengali Babú kind, and neglecting the strongerraces, has been a most foolish one. It is well that the Mahomedans are rousing themselves to assert their strength. They have certainly themselves to blame in the past for their indifference to the advantages which British rule offered to them in the many ways of education and political advancement. But time, which in the end teaches all men wisdom, is having its good effect upon them now. The loyalty of the Mahomedans of India to British rule can be relied upon, and everything should be done by the Government to strengthen and encourage that friendly feeling. The loyalty of the Mahomedans is our real strength in India.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF SOUTHERN INDIA.

Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of gentlemen interested in the commercial affairs of the British Empire in the East was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday, Jan. 19, the Right Hon. Lord Harris presiding, for the purpose of considering the recent new departure in the development of Indian gold mining. The principal address was given by Sir Roper Lethbridge, C.I.E., M.P., late Press Commissioner in India, who furnished elaborate particulars of his recent tour in the auriferous districts of Southern India. He pointed out that the great and all important difference between the Australian gold fields and those of India is to be found in the fact that when the former were discovered they had hardly been trodden by human foot, whereas the latter have been the seat of a dense population and of a high civilization from time immemorial. In Australia the English and Californian diggers found the gold much as Nature had left it, not only in the rocky matrix, but cast up and expressed in the form of nuggets, and permeating great alluvial deposits or "placers." In India centuries of industrial toil and minute research have long ago removed all surface gold; wherever the old miners could get out the auriferous quartz by quarrying they have done so, and the only limits imposed on them have been due to their ignorance of those engineering appliances by which mines are drained, ventilated, &c., as well as of those chemical means by which the ores are treated. On the other hand, the gold-bearing rocks of India seem to be, on an average, far richer than those of Australia or America; and it is now fully established, on official evidence, and from innumerable private investigations, that many of the auriferous reefs of Mysore, even at shallow depths, can yield one, two, and even three ounces per ton on an average of large quantities of crushings. Gross mismanagement, ignorance, and criminal extravagance ruined the credit of the enterprise in its early days, but Sir Roper Lethbridge expressed his conviction that, with honest work and good management. work and good management, a period of great prosperity and profits awaits the miners in at least thirty of the gold-fields of Southern India. A discussion followed, in which the views of the opener were generally supported, and the proceedings closed with the customary votes of thanks.

MAJOR J. O'CONNELL, 1st Battalion Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Volunteer Corps, has been allowed to resign his commission.

HON. CAPTAIN JAMES GRANT has resigned his appointment as paymaster, Sind Volunteer Rifle Corps.

A good service pension has been conferred on Lieut.-Colonel William Dickinson, C.S.I., Retired List, in room of Colonel M. W. Willoughby, C.S.I., Bombay S.C., succeeded to the Colonel's allowance.

It is considered probable that the appointment of Director-General of Military Education, vacant by the death of Lieut.-General Gamble, will not be filled up, and that the office will be abolished.

It is rumoured that Bangalore is to be made a Brigade; that Belgaum is to be abolished as a Brigade, and rolled up with Bellary, which is again to become the headquarters of a Division; that Kamptee is to be transferred to Bombay; that Rangoon is to be made a Brigade; and that Bhamo is to have a Brigadier whose headquarters will be at Mandalay.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR THOMAS BAKER has proceeded on short leave, and the command of the Allahabad Division has devolved, for the time being, on Colonel H. Worsley, C.B., commanding at Cawnpore. Colonel A. F. Hart, 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment, remains in command of the Allahabad Station during Sir Thomas Baker's absence.

THE Chief Commissioner, Burma, has applied for the sanction of the Government of India to deport to India all military Native prisoners undergoing sentences of imprisonment in civil jails in Burma.

ment in civil jails in Burma.

A TELEGRAM office has been opened at Sagaing, near Mimbu. The Mhow Military camp will be assembled on January 8, its manceuvres lasting to the 31st. The following troops will take part in it:—6th Dragoon Guards, 7th Dragoon Guards, 3rd Bombay Cavalry, 2nd Bombay Lancers, and 1st Central India Horse. This being a cavalry camp General Luck will of course attend it. General Gillespie, C.B., starts from Mhow to join on January 5. Captain Bayley, the assistant Quartermaster-General proceeds there almost immediately. The Commissariat and Transport will be represented by Captain Lucas and Lieutenant Wickham.

Some of the Southern India Volunteer Corps have asked the Supreme Government to be exempted from income-tax, and have been told that the question cannot be considered at present. The Pioneer says if all the suggested easements of Volunteers had been carried out, the twelve thousand men with rifles in India would now be in possession of those privileges; (1) they would pay no income-tax; (2) they would all have free passages home after every five, seven or twelve years' service, or (3) would enjoy a reduction of fare for their families; (4) they would all travel on Indian lines free, or at half rates; and (5) their commissioned ranks would be, on every occasion, spoken and written to as are commissioned officers in the Regular Army.

WHAT HAPPENED.

"That in view of the loyalty of the people, the hardships which it causes, and the unmerited slur it casts upon the people of this country the Government be moved so to modify the provisions of Chapter 4, and if necessary, any other portion of Act II. of 1878 as shall enable all persons to wear arms unless debarred therefrom either as individuals or as members of particular communities for reasons to be recorded in writing and duly published."—See Resolution of the "National" Congress.

Hari Chunder Mukerji, pride of Bow Bazar, Owner of a Native Press, barrishter-at-lar, Waited on the Government with a claim to wear Sabres by the bucketful, rifles by the pair.

Then the Indian Government winked a wicked wink, Said to Chunder Mukerji:—"Stick to pen and ink, They're the safest implements, but, if you insist, We will let you carry arms wheresoe'er you list."

Hari Chunder Mukerji went to Rodda's, and Bought the tubes of Lancaster, Ballard, Deane and Bland, Bought a shiny bowie-knife, bought a town-made sword, Jingled like an ekka-horse when he went abroad.

ut the Indian Government, always keen to please, Also gave parwanas to horrid men like these:— Yar Mahomed, Yusufzai, down to kill or steal, Chimbu Singh from Bikanir, Tantia the Bhil, Killa Khan the Marri Chief, Jowar Singh the Sikh, Nabbi Baksh, Panjabi Jat, Abdul Huq Rafiq (He was a Wahabi) last, little Boh Hla-Oo Took advantage of the Act, and . . . a Snider too.

They were unenlightened men, Rodda's knew them not, They procured their swords and guns mostly on the spot; And the law of centuries, plus a hundred fights, Made them slow to disregard one another's rights.

With a unanimity dear to patriot hearts, All these hairy gentlemen out of foreign parts, Said: —"The good old days are back! Let us go to war!" Swaggered down the Grand Trunk-road into Bow Bazar.

Nabbi Baksh, Panjabi Jât, found a hide-bound flail, Chimbu Singh from Bikanir oiled his Tonk jezail, Yar Mahomed, Yusufzai, spat, and smiled with glee As he ground the butcher-knife of the Khyberee.

Jowar Singh, the Sikh, secured tulwar, quoit, and mace, Abdul Huq, Wahabi, took his peshkabz from its place And, amid the jungle-grass, danced and grinned and jabbered Little Boh Hla-Oo and yerked the dah-blade from the scabbard.

Did they meet with Mukerji? Soothly, who can say? Yar Mahomed only grins in a nasty way, Jowar Singh is reticent, Chimbu follows suit,
But the belts of all of them simply bulge with loot!

What became of Rodda's guns? Afghans black and grubby, Sell them for their silver-weight, to the men of Pubbi; And the shiny bowie-kife and the town-made sword are Hanging in a Marri tent just across the Bordah!

What became of Mukerji? Ask Mahomed Yar, Prodding Shiva's sacred bull down the Bow Bazar, Speak to bovine Nabbi Baksh. Question Land and Sea. Ask the Indian Delegates—only don't ask me!

A VERY favourable order for the encouragement of Mahomedan education in Assam has been passed by the Chief It is that a junior scholarship shall be given each Mahomedan boy, being a native of the province, who passes the Entrance Examination from an Assam school, and a senior scholarship when he passes the First Examination in Arts.

In the early part of this century two Natives discovered a reef of argentiferous galena in the provinces about to be opened up by the Nagpore Railway. They promptly took specimens to the Raja of their territory, whose first question was:—
"Does any one else know of the existence of this ore?" They assured him that no one else knew, and they were at once beheaded, the Raja remarking that if the sahib loque came to hear of the existence of this mine they would annex his country.

THE SUICIDE OF A BENGAL CIVILIAN.—A most sad and tragic affair occurred on the morning of Dec. 4 at the General Hospital, Calcutta. It seems that Mr. H. J. H. Fasson, Officiating Magistrate and Collector of Backergani, arrived at the Presidency recently, and went to reside with one of the medical officers at the General Hospital. Mr. Fasson was about to take furlough, and intended to proceed to England, his health having been indifferent for some time. Of late more especially he had been suffering from fits of melancholy and general depression of spirits, the result of excessive pressions. and general depression of spirits, the result of excessive pressure of work, extending over several months. Mr. Larminie, Commissioner of Dacca, perceiving the state of health in which he was, was little out of his company for any time. There was nothing, however, to cause alarm, and the occurrence was one of those sudden and terrific blows which no one can foresee. About five o'clock the residents at the hospital were startled by the report of a gun, and immediately afterwards Mr. Fasson was discovered lying dead in the verandah, with a gun, where it had dropped from his hand. Dr. Murray and Dr. Clarke were quickly on the spot, but it was found that death had been instantaneous. The deceased arrived in India in November, 1872, was engaged in famine arrived in India in November, 1872, was engaged in famine relief duty at Dinagepur, and has done good service as a District officer. He was an able, popular, and promising servant of Government, and his sad death will be widely mourned, while deep sympathy will be felt everywhere for those who have been so suddenly bereaved. Mr. Fasson leaves a widow and three children.—Englishman.

TRADE MARK.

PURE—EASILY DIGESTED—ECONOMICAL

"I consider FRY'S PURE CONCENTRATED COCOA much better and more economical for the use of troops than the usual rations of coffee and tea that are now supplied. The strengthening qualities FRY'S COCOA possesses renders it a valuable adjunct to the list of medica comforts."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JANUARY 30, 1888.

General Intelligence.

BY OVERLAND MAIL.

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th January; and from Calcutta to the 10th January

THE Supreme Legislative Council met in Calcutta on Jan. 6, but the business before it was formal.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOT, successor to Sir T. C. Hope, took his seat in Council on Jan. 6.

Mr. F. B. PEACOCK, Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government, has been granted furlough for twenty months.

Mr. W. MACKWORTH Young has taken over charge of the office of Home Secretary to the Government of India from Mr. A. P. Macdonell, who is allowed furlough to England.

LORD AND LADY REAY have been staying in Caloutta as guests of the Viceroy.

THE Commander-in-Chief will after all be unable to visit Behar this season owing to the exigencies of his touring engagements.

It is probable that Sir George White, K.C.B., now commanding the Burma Expeditionary Force, will succeed to the command of the Allahabad Division when General Sir Thomas Baker is transferred to Rawal Pindi in the Spring.

SIR CHARLES SARGENT, Chief Justice in the Bombay High Court, has written from England stating that, owing to ill-health, he will probably not return.

THE Conference of the Commissioners of Bengal, which has been sitting at Calcutta, has dispersed, having arrived at various conclusions on matters of detail which will simplify their work, at the same time extending the principle of decentralisation.

THE Lieutenant Governor of Bengal was to leave Calcutta on a visit to Mozufferpore on the 20th January.

THE troopship Malabar left Bombay on Jan. 13 for Portsmouth.

MR. NEY ELIAS is reported to have declined the C.I.E. granted to him in the New Year's Gazette.

THE MAHARAJA OF KAPURTHALA is at present in Calcutta.

THE Bank of Madras has declared a dividend for the last half-year at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, making 11 per cent. for the year.

THE MAHARAJA OF MYSORE'S Cavalry will take part in the Bangalore Camp of Exercise in February.

Anthrax has broken out among the horses of the 3rd Dragoon Guards.

THE British India steamer Almora, from London, stranded near the Nynan Flat at Calcutta, but floated uninjured the same afternoon.

THE Irrawaddy has fallen to such an extent that steamers cannot pass below Sagain.

A REDISTRIBUTION of Military commands is proposed in Madras.

SIR DINSHAW MANECKJI PETIT has just given the Bombay Government a property valued at three lakhs of rupees as a habitation for the proposed Technical Institute. and has also given Rs. 1,20,000 in aid of a hospital in Bombay

THE MAHARAJA OF MYSORE has expressed a wish to place the military resources of his State at the disposal of the Government of India with a view to assist in the defence of the Empire. A formal offer has been made to the Viceroy.

THE RAJA OF KAPURTHALA is amongst the notables now in Calcutta, where also the seven Maliks of the Khyber District, under Colonel Warburton's guidance, are at present sight-seeing.

SIR SALAR JUNG is leaving Aurungabad to spend a few days at Hyderabad. The Nawab's visit is not a matter of any political significance, but his freedom to come and go will be an agreeable sign to the outer world of the growth of better relations all round among the pillars of the State.

A RECONCILIATION has been effected between the Nizam and Nawaz Jung, the leader of the Arab free-bands, who was banished for life and excommunicated about two years ago, and restored to his Highness's favour last year. He has been still advancing in his Prince's esteem, and is among those who received titles of honour at the Nizam's birthday durbar.

THE Bank of Bengal has declared a dividend for the past half year at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, transferred 2 lakhs to the reserve fund, and carried forward Rs. 1,10,000. The reserve fund now amounts to $50\frac{1}{3}$

THE latest news of the Southern Shan column from Maukme, dated the 15th December, stated that there had been fever among the men, but that their health was improving. The column had met with no opposition.

MR. JUSTICE SCOTT, who had been on a visit to Ceylon, has returned to Bombay.

THE Nizam's Government has subscribed five thousand rupees to the Imperial Institute.

THE Orient Line of steamers to and from Australia are likely to call at Colombo in future.

THE mortality of Delhi is very great just now owing to fever, which still continues to rage. Rain is urgently wanted.

It is reported that the French Government have dismissed 477 Europeans and Indians from the Civil Service at Saigon, and the consequence is that the acting Governor-General and the Lieutenant-Governor have both resigned.

IT is thought probable that the "Guardian and Ward" Bill will be passed through the Supreme Council during the present session.

THE first batch of remounts from the Cape of Good Hope has arrived in the Clan Gordon. The experiment is to be tried on a small scale at first.

THE Government of India has recently ruled that all ordinary political expenditure in Assam is to be provincialised, and has sanctioned an extra grant of Rs. 52,800 to be added to the Provincial Budget estimate.

BALANCES held in cash in the Civil Treasuries of the Government of India and at credit of Government in the presidency banks and their branches on the last day in December, 1885, Rs. 8,05,90,000; 1886, Rs. 10,67,19,000; and 1887, Rs. 10,29,48,000.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Rast Goftar, writing from Ahmedabad about the recent tour of H.E. the Governor in that district, says that the several tradesmen and shopkeepers who came there from distant parts of the country in search of custom were greatly disappointed in their expectations. The only men who did good business were those who had brought English boots and shoes for sale. The several Hindoo officials and townspeople who ordinarily put on their country shoes were seen adorned with English boots and stockings. Being unaccustomed to put on English boots, most of them had put on the right boot on the left foot, and vice versa, and had thus unconsciously become the laughing-stock of the people.

NOTES.

THERE is nothing like modesty, especially in a special correspondent. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs to that journal this morning:—"The Indian Government has adopted a suggestion, made in one of my telegrams to the Times, to levy an import duty on petroleum."

THE question, however, is no new one. It has been suggested over and over again in India, but was taken little heed of because, perhaps, Indian Finance Ministers hate to go out of old beaten tracks to create fresh imposts, for the collection of which new machinery may be required. If public opinion in India would have allowed it, the elasticity of the income-tax and license-tax would have been tried to the utmost. But now some fresh method of raising the revenue must be adopted, and a tax on petroleum, which is a very cheap commodity in India, is not likely to be grumbled at. In England, objections will, of course, be made against the increase of the salt tax—a tax which may not be defensible in principle, but which works well, without friction, and without sensibly burdening the poor ryot on whose behalf the philanthropists at home pretend to interest themselves.

ALTHOUGH there are exceptional causes for the deficit in the Indian Budget for 1887-88 the falling-off of the Opium Revenue is a serious matter, for it is not likely to be a temporary falling-off, but a continuous one. The problem of how to replace what has been hitherto one of the chief sources of income will be a difficult one for Indian Financial Ministers to solve. One thing, however, is certain, that the shears of rigid economy as regards civil and military expenditure, and, we may add, home charges, will have to be applied.

ANOTHER matter for serious reflection is the falling-off of the wheat trade of India, so far as shipments are concerned. What the falling-off in the export of this commodity has been during the past three years may be judged from the following figures. The imports of wheat into the United Kingdom from the British East Indies were in 1885, 12,101,963 cwt.; in 1886, 11,208,665 cwt.; in 1887, 8,509,095 cwt. That is to say, a fall of about one-third in three years.

THE decrease is accounted for from the impossibility of Indian wheat competing in price with American wheat, and the increased importations from Chili. The expensive land carriage in India burdens the Indian exporter heavily, but it is also be taken into account that buyers here are given to reject Indian wheat because it does not arrive so clean as that from Russia, or the United States and Canada.

It is satisfactory to learn, however, that the imports of cotton into the United Kingdom have been steadily increasing during the three past years, the figures for 1887 showing a total of upwards of one million cwt. over those of 1885. The fears that the demand which was first created in this country for Indian cotton, in consequence of the American Civil War, would fail have not been realised. According to all commercial reports the Indian produce has gained a firm and extending hold upon the English markets.

The supposed remarks of the Afghan Chiefs on their visit to Calcutta, which the Times' correspondent has considered sufficiently important to send by wire to-day, and to comments on which the Times itself devotes part of its leading columns, will be read with some interest, some incredulity, and some amusement by Anglo-Indians at home, especially by those who in India have had some experience of how strange Native opinions are sometimes interpreted and prepared for English readers. When the Khan of Khelat first visited British territory he was also reported as having indulged in terms of astonishment and delight at British civilisation in India, and at all the wonders of our rule which came under his eye. And although it is said that up to the moment of his departure he and his followers could not understand what soap was intended for unless to eat, or silver dinner forks except to pocket, he saw clearly, and expressed himself to that effect, that the British administration of India was a marvel of intelligence, wisdom, and political ability. At least, it was so reported in the English Press.

THE Pioneer is of opinion that the Calcutta correspondent of the Times should be more careful in investigating the sources of his information about Hyderabad affairs. "The correspondent's telegram of December 11th denies the statement originally published by the St. James's Gazette that the Nizam sent a cheque for twenty lakhs to the Viceroy, ou the occasion of Colonel Marshall's late visit to Simla. Nevertheless that such a cheque was sent we have reason to know; whether drawn by the Nizam himself, or by the Minister on the Nizam's account, is immaterial. The Reserve Fund of a million sterling in London, attributed to the Hyderabad State, is a myth."

THE same journal is rather hard upon that harmless, if sometimes troublesome, individual the Globe-trotter in telling the following story against one of the number:—

One of the family was lately discovered in an Agra hotel, preparing to fly to Calcutta. To him the sympathetic Anglo-Indian said, "Have you seen the Taj?" "Well—er, we saw it by moonlight, and it's no good seeing it again. There's so much of that sort of thing hereabouts, and all so very much alike." In vain did the Anglo-Indian try to explain that buildings like the Taj were not strewn throughout India. The Globe-trotter, like the American who smoked in Milan Railway-station while his wife explored the town, was "sick of Cathedrals." None the less, when that traveller returns to his family he will probably pose as a superior being who has done the East.

THE Times of India is very indignant that the Bombay Artillery Volunteers should have been sent into action at a sham fight with utterly unreliable friction tubes. The tubes, the paper says, bore the mark of 1884, and were precisely those that would have been served out to a mountain battery of Royal Artillery going on active service. In the case of one gun provided with thirty rounds of ammunition and forty friction tubes only three shots could be fired. Again and again guns were thrown out of action at most critical moments through the failure of the tubes. The Times asks for a prompt investigation of the matter by the military authorities. Indeed! Has our Bombay contemporary forgotten how British Regular Artillery has been sent into real battle with the same kind of tubes? What will the conceit of the Volunteers come to next?

Besides, the Bombay Artillery Volunteers have very little to complain of. If they are supplied with unreliable friction tubes, their infantry comrades on the Bengal side have been supplied with unreliable ammunition. This is in keeping with the military unities. The Civil and Military Gazette says:—"At manœuvres and at camps of exercise it has frequently happened that troops have been placed at considerable disadvantage by reason of their inability to load their rifles with the blank ammunition provided by themselves, or when loaded to make the cartridges go off. It has also occasionally happened that the cartridge has elected to go off at the wrong end, and become a firework. The latter accident lends much reality to the mimic warfare of the day, but is not popular among such of our rank and file as are in favour of the retention of the usual number of eyes and other features. This, however, is a purely personal matter, and consequently not one of any very general interest."

This is what the regulars as well as the Volunteers of Bengal have to put up with, and from some experience of both we should prefer an "utterly unreliable" friction tube to a "firework" cartridge. But some people are never satisfied.

(By Telegraph.) (Times Correspondents.) INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JAN. 29.

The Indian Government has adopted a suggestion made in one of my telegrams to the Times, to levy an import duty on petroleum. A Bill was introduced at a meeting of Council held on Friday last, with the object of clothing the Government with the necessary legal authority. As a concession, apparently, to the recent requisitions of various Chambers of Commerce and other public bodies, the Financial Member took advantage of the occasion to enter into an elaborate explanation and review of the financial situation. In defending the Executive against the charge of extravagant expenditure. planation and review of the financial situation. In defending the Executive against the charge of extravagant expenditure, he pointed out that 77 crores yearly only amounted to 60 per cent. of the sum expended in England, while in India the Government was dealing with an area ten times greater than England and a population seven times as large as the English population. He said it should be also borne in mind that the accounts presented belonged not to one Government, but to nine provincial administrations as well as the Imperial Government, and that five of the nine exceeded in popula-tion, and almost equalled in area, the five principal States of Europe.

In comparing the Budget estimates for 1887-8 with those of the prior Budget he pointed out that the land revenue had increased by an average amount of rx120,000 yearly. Salt, the TX900,000, and other sources of revenue rx200,000. added: excise, and stamps contributed rx420,000, the new income-tax

"The civil expenditure has, however, increased by rx1,600,000.
Of this a sum of rx1,100,000 is due to Upper Burma. The ordinary standard of public works expenditure is rx1,000,000 for military works and rx350,000 for civil works; but the Budget for 1887-8 is charged with an addition of rx480,000 for Upper Burma, and one of rx200,000 for the construction of military roads on the North-West frontier.

military roads on the North-West frontier.

"The figures of the army expenditure show a heavy increase—nearly rx1,000,000; rx720,000 of this is due for special charges arising out of the operations in Upper Burma.

"The heaviest difference between the estimated and the actual expenditure was caused by the fall in exchange, amounting to rx1,790,000. The financial position at the time of the issue of the Budget estimates for 1887-8 was the following:—The fall in the value of silver, the necessity of improving our military strength, and the expenditure connected with the occupation of the new province had absorbed not only the three years' improvement of revenue, but the whole margin which the Government' possessed in 1884-5. In addition the Government has pledged itself to heavy expenditure for harbour defences and military defences on the North-West frontier, frontier,

"The Government is driven now to fresh taxation. The rupee must be calculated at 17d. only. The home expenditure is nearly £14,500,000 sterling, and the military demands and interest on the apital of the aided railway companies have added rx500,000 to the estimates of 1884-85. We have to face added rx500,000 to the estimates of 1884-85. We have to face also a permanent deterioration in the opium revenue, as a result of the recent convention regarding the collection of the duty in China. The loss in the current year will amount to something between rx250,000 and rx300,000. The Government, therefore, has to meet a difference between estimated, and actual expenditure of rx420,000—namely, exchange rx720,000, railways rx 400,000, and opium rx 300,000.

"At the present time the expenditure, rx78,170,000, has to met out of a revenue of rx76,750,000. To cover this the be met out of a revenue of rx76,750,000. To cover this the salt duty has been raised from Rs. 2 to Rs. 2.8 in Continental India, and from three annas to one rupee in Burma per 80lb. The extra duty will produce rx1,600,000 in India and rx125,000 in Burma. Lower Burma will cease to be exempt from income-tax, but the assessment and collection will be confined income-tax, but the assessment and collection will be confined to the towns and other centres of trade. It is hoped also to increase the revenue in Burma by excise.

"It is estimated that the probable annual import of petroleum amounts to rx13,000,000. It is proposed by the present Bill to levy an import duty of 5 per cent. This duty, together with the enhanced duty on salt, will give an increased income of rx1,790,000, so that the expenditure willstand atrx78,920,000, and the revenue at rx78,630,000. Deducting the special defence expenditure of rx470.000."

plus revenue of rx470,000.'

The Rajah Peary Mohun Mookerjee stated that he was not at present prepared to say whether he could accept the conclusions of the Financial Member. He approved, however, the additional duty on salt, as it would not be felt to any appreciable extent by even the poorest class in India. He suggested that if the Government desired to increase the revenue a duty should be levied on metals. Something like eight millions in value of metal and two millions of hardware were imported annually. A duty on these articles could well be imposed without inflicting any burden on the poorest classes. The Viceroy, in expressing his reluctance at being forced to consent to further taxation, said his justification lay in the heavy annual loss through the depreciation of silver. This loss had been further added to by the fall in the price of opium and a decrease in railway receipts.

Leave was then given to introduce the Bill.

Certain Afghan chiefs in charge of the Khyber Pass have lately visited Calcutta as guests of the Government. The following is an interesting account which has been given by one preciable extent by even the poorest class in India.

lowing is an interesting account which has been given by one of their number of the impressions derived from his visit:—
"This is a King's country; every one ought to be astonished at seeing all the wonderful things to be seen in it. The thing which has most astonished us is the regularity with which everything is conducted. During our railway journey we arrived at the different stations and left again with great regularity, as arranged. There is nothing like this in our country. A country which is ill-governed is not a good country.

"We arrived at Calcutta early in the morning, and, being tired, stayed in our lodgings the whole of that day. On the day following we went to Howrah to see the railway station and workshops. We saw all the engines at work. There is nothing like these in our own country, which is a poor country. We were then taken to the Mint, and saw the pice and four-anna pieces that are being coined there. The Cabul rupees are only worth 12½ annas; they are stamped with a die and a hammer. There is nothing to equal this Government either in its silver or anything else, or in its management of the country. We visited the fort next day, and considered it very strong. We saw all the cannon and big guns there. They are very good guns.

"We were then taken to the Botanical Gardens in a steam launch. This is the first time we have been on board a steamer, and we enjoyed the trip very much. The gardens are steamer, and we enjoyed the trip very much. The gardens are by far the finest we have ever seen. We were then taken to the Zoological Gardens, and to Mateabruz, the palace of the late King of Oude, which is a very fine place. We saw all the animals at the Zoological Gardens. Some of the animals here we had seen before at Cabul, but some of them we have never seen before, and they greatly astonished us, as we could not tell to what country they belonged.

"We then paid a visit to the Bacchante, and were truly astonished by the big guns and by everything on board. We never saw such things before. No other Government could ever make ships like that. The chiefs wanted to distribute Rs. 900 among the crew for showing all these wonderful things, but the captain of the ship said the Sirkar would be very angry at their accepting a present. The chiefs again wanted to give the sailors a present, but were told that they could not be allowed to do so, as what had been shown to them had been shown for their own amusement. When we went down in the hold we saw the men's tables spread in a minute and again snown for their own amusement. When we went down in the hold we saw the men's tables spread in a minute and again taken up, their beds put down and taken up—all done in a minute—and in a moment the ship was made ready for a fight. The big guns were fired, but only with fuzes. We saw the sailors going up the rigging very quickly, at the double, and run up the masts and remain quiet there. We have never seen these things before. We were presented to the Lord Sahib of the Sea, who was very kind to us.

"We were then taken to Dum dum where we saw a small."

"We were then taken to Dum-dum, where we saw a small arms manufactory and the workmen making cartridges and bullets. Another day we visited the Englishman newspaper office, and saw them printing, and also making lead letters. One of us wrote a verse in Persian. A sahib then took paper, and with a machine, which cut like a very sharp knife into some white stuff, he wrote it. Then lead was poured on, and some white stuff, he wrote it. Then lead was poured on, and in a few minutes they were printing the verse on some copies of the Englishman, which were presented to us. We also spoke through the telephone. Some of us were at the Englishman and were the some of the solutions of the solutions. man office and some at Messrs. King Hamilton's, and we recognised each other's voice. Then we visited the telegraph man once and some at messrs. King Italinovis, and recognised each other's voice. Then we visited the telegraph office, where we spoke with a friend at Peshawur—all in a few minutes. One of us asked a relitave at Peshawur how he was, as he had been suffering from fever. He replied 'Quite well; how's your boil?' Now these words astonished as very much, because none of us knew that this man had had a boil—only his relative in Peshawar. Creat are the ways of the Sirkar!

because none of us knew that this man had had a boil—only his relative in Peshawur. Great are the ways of the Sirkar!

"We were then taken to a jute-mill, where we saw the manufacture of gunny bags and cloth. The Maliks admired this more than anything else, as they had never seen cloth made in such a way before. The sight struck them as much as the Bacchante and the way in which that monster could be got ready for fighting. One of the last sights we have seen in Calcutta is the Bank of Bengal—a great treasure-house of the Sirkar. There we were shown great sackloads of runees. in Calcutta is the Bank of Bengal—a great treasure-house of the Sirkar. There we were shown great sackloads of rupees, enough to buy up the Cabul bazaar. India is indeed a wonderful country, and we are deeply grateful to the Viceroy Sahib for having brought us down here to see such wonders. We would gladly exchange our own land for a small slice of rich Bengal country, and would settle down happily here for life. But this is not our fate. We are now setting out on a long journey to Bombay, and we go trusting entirely to the Sirkar, for we do not know the way or the country. But we have Colonel Warburton Sahib with us, and that makes us feel confident. With the Colonel Sahib we will go to the end of the world, or to Jehanum, if the Sirkar only gives the order."

SIKKIM.

This demonstration of military power has been rendered necessary by the aggressive conduct of the Tibetans. The unfortunate policy of abandoning Mr. Macaulay's mission is entirely responsible for the insolent and threatening attitude of the Executive in Tibet. Instead of a peaceful and commercial mission, unless the Government is very careful, it will be compared to the coupled to meet the couple of our periodic pelled to meet the costly expenditure of one of our periodic frontier campaigns.

CLOSE OF THE NATIONAL CONGRESS. (Madras Mail.)

The three days' session of the third National Congress has The three days' session of the third National Congress has been brought to a fortuitous conclusion, and the delegates from afar have already commenced to take wing. The next Congress will meet—to the infinite disgust of the Pioneer, in all probability—at Allahabad, and other great towns will be visited in due course as the years glide by. The recent Congress was instructive of many things. First of all, in our opinion, it served to show that, for all the talk that somewhat vexed the soul of the President and other haters of problems to the Nations of India have exceedingly little to graphle lixity, the Natives of India have exceedingly little to grumble about. The great crowd that attended the meeting was self-controlled and self-directed. There was no one vested with official authority to make them afraid of speaking out. And the orators who improved the occasion did not mince their the orators who improved the occasion did not mince their words; they spoke, as they felt, with remarkable eloquence. There was no want of spirit among them, and no want of earnestness. They seemed to be alive to the fact that grave responsibility attached to them as the spokesmen of their countrymen. They obviously wished to assist in bringing about reforms that may contribute to the well-being of India, as well as to the stability of the Government. Yet what, after all, had they to ask for? Little more than the privilege of representation in the Legislative Councils of their land. The burden of their arguments was, "Give us this, and we shall be happy ever after." The history of England in the nineteenth century does not warrant the belief. Five years ago this country was much agitated by the demand for local self-Government. Wonders were to flow from that concession, and wonders were Was much agreated by the demand for local seir-Government. Wonders were to flow from that concession, and wonders were never to cease. The concession was made, and already the Congress has been told to its face, the undoubted truth, that local self-Government has become a farce in the country. In theory it was excellent; in practice it has come to nought. The Government is careful to obtain accurate information of the attendance of elected and of nominated members of local boards, and the evidence tends to show that the concession referred to was made prematurely, or before the country was ripe for it. It may be that a very different result would follow ripe for it. the proposed extension of the simulacra of Parliament in India. It was free to the speakers at the Congress to say that that will not be the case; it is equally free to others to conclude that history will repeat itself. The experiment might, however, be worth trying. It is asked for in no seditious spirit, and the Government may yet do something to meet spirit, and the Government may yet do something to meet what is the wish of the educated classes who make the request. Some knowledge of the very ephemeral nature of public appreciation of political favours received, or extorted, makes usapprehend that soon after the "boon" had been granted the cry would be raised for something more.

The "unholy alliance of judicial and executive functions" has for many a year been deprecated by the Anglo-Indian Press; and the establishment of Military Colleges in India, and the admission of Natives to the higher ranks of the Army have been frequently advocated in the same quarter. The demand for permission to shoulder a rifle in the capacity of demand for permission to shoulder a rifle in the capacity of a Volunteer is a vindication of the manhood that is affronted demand for permission to shoulder a rifle in the capacity of a Volunteer is a vindication of the manhood that is affronted by an inviduous exclusion; but if the exclusion were removed to-morrow, would any greater disposition be shown by Indians to enlist in the Volunteer corps than is shown by Europeans and Eurasians? How long would the weariness of musketry instruction, or the monotony of drill, be endured regardless of private convenience? The Arms Act, too, is inviduous; yet it is an Act that is designed not to insult, but to protect the very classes that were chiefly represented at the Congress! The Government could not draw a line between cultured and uncultured Natives of India. Mr. Sundram Sastri, Vakil of the Madras High Court, in replying to the arguments of certain Bengalee and Bombay gentlemen, who had supported a resolution in favour of the repeal of the Act, said that it was all very well to contend that everybody should be allowed to carry arms because of wild beasts, &c., but supposing each person present at the Congress was armed with a double-barrelled breech-loading rifle, how many of them would face a tiger, or leopard, at 30 yards' distance? The country, he added, was too wide, the Police organisation was too weak, to allow everybody and anybody to wear arms. He held that the repeal of the Act would inundate the country with rifles, and that all the budmashes would have arms in their hands.

We need not, however, attempt to criticise minutely the sayings and doings of the Congress. The gathering has been

The gathering has been singularly successful in drawing together a vast concourse of people representing very many families, or tribes of men. It has been in earnest, and unaggressive; its proceedings have been conducted with great propriety; and from beginning toend it deserved well of the country whose interests it had at heart. It went unavoidably over much old ground. The subjects submitted to it were deficient in the attraction of novelty, but the speakers for the most part had much that was fresh to say about the well-worn themes. The arrangements reflected great credit on the Committee's power of organisation, and the manner in which the delegates conformed to those arrangethe manner in which the delegates conformed to those arrangements testified to the respect for authority which is not the least engaging characteristic of Her Majesty's subjects in Hindustan. THE GLOBE TROTTER IN INDIA. (Pioneer.)

There is no reverence in the Globe-Trotter: he is brazen. Al young man from Manchester was travelling to Bombay in order—how the words hurt!—to be home by Christmas. He had come through America, New Zealand and Australia, and finding that he had ten days to spare at Bombay conceived the modest idea of "doing India." "I don't say that I've done it all; but you may say that I've seen a good deal." Then he explained that he had been "much pleased" at Agra, "much pleased" at Delhi and, last profanation, "very much pleased" at the Taj. Indeed he seemed to be going through life just then "much pleased" at everything. With rare and sparkling originality he remarked that India was a "big place," and that there were many things to buy. Verily this young man must have been a delight to the Delhi box wallahs. He had purchased shawls and embroidery "to the tune of" a certain number of rupees duly set forth, and he had purchased jewellery to another tune. These were gifts for friends at home, and he considered them "very Eastern." If silver filigree work modelled on Palais Royal patterns, or aniline blue scarves be "Eastern," he had succeeded in his heart's desire. For some inscrutable end ithas been decreed that man shall take a delight in making his fellow man miserable. The Englishmen heart to There is no reverence in the Globe-Trotter: he is brazen. A "Eastern," he had succeeded in his heart's desire. For some inscrutable end it has been decreed that man shall take a delight in making his fellow man miserable. The Englishman began to point out gravely the probable extent to which the young man from Manchester had been swindled, and the Young Man said:—"By Jove! You don't say so. I hate being done! If there's anything I hate it's being done!"

He had been so happy in the "thought of getting home by He had been so happy in the "thought of getting home by Christmas," and so charmingly communicative as to the members of his family, for whom such-and-such gifts were intended, that the Englishman cut short the record of fraud and soothed him by saying that he had not been so very badly "done" after all. This consideration was misplaced, for, his peace of mind restored, the Young Man from Manchester looked out of the restored, the Young Man from Manchester looked out of the window, and, waving his hand over the Empire generally, said:

"I say! Look here! All those wells are wrong, you know."

The wells were on the wheel and inclined plane system; but he objected to the incline, and said that it would be much better for the bullocks if they walked on level ground. Then light dawned upon him, and he said:—"I suppose it's to exercise all their muscles. Y'know a canal horse is no use after he has been on the towpath for some time. He can't walk anywhere but on the flat, y'know, and I suppose it's just the same with bullocks." The spurs of the Aravalis, under which the train was running, had evidently suggested this brilliant idea which passed uncontradicted, for the Englishman was looking out of the window.

If one were bold enough to generalise after the manner of

If one were bold enough to generalise after the manner of globe-trotters, it would be easy to build up a theory on the well incident to account for the apparent insanity of some of our cold weather visitors. Even the Young Man from Manchester could evolve a complete idea for the training of well-bullocks in the East at thirty seconds' notice. How much the more could a cultivated observer from, let us say, an English constituency blunder and pervert and mangle! We in this country have no time to work out the notion, which is worthy of the consideration of some leisurely Teuton intellect.

Envy may have prompted a too bitter judgment of the Young Man from Manchester; for, as the train bore him from Jaipur to Ahmedabad, happy in "his getting home by Christmas," pleased as a child with his Delhi atrocities, pink-cheeked, whiskered and superbly self-confident, the Englishman whose home for the time was a dak bungaloathsome hotel, watched his departure regretfully; for he knew exactly to what sort of genial, cheery British household, rich in untravelled kin, that young man was speeding. It is pleasant to play at globe-trotting; but to enter fully into the spirit of the piece one must also be going home for Christmas.

EUROPEAN HEAD-MASTERS IN INDIAN SCHOOLS.

(Indian Spectator.)

We, for our part, instinctively shun the mean art of crying up Natives as Natives, or crying down Europeans as Europeans. Therefore, we unhesitatingly avow that European headmasters are, under certain necessary conditions, better than Native head-masters. Where those conditions are not, are only partially fulfilled, a Native head-master of certain qualifications may be preferable. Thus it is a sine qua non of the success of a school under a European head-master, that he knows a good deal of the students' vernacular; knows something of the ways, courts their presence, and himself acts in such a manner that they may court his presence, and not avoid it rather; that he is a fair scholar himself; and lastly that he stays long enough in one place to turn his slowly acquired experience to the advantage of his pupils. Let us set against this the kind of European head-masters we have actually had. Most of them have been ignorant of the vernacular of the boys, and of European head-masters we have actually had. Most of them have been ignorant of the vernacular of the boys, and this has prevented them from appreciating the difficulties of their pupils. In colleges this is no great drawback, but in high schools it is. Again, much depends on the opportunities sought by a European head-master to mix with his boys, and to draw them to him. If he keeps aloof, as in most cases he has been found doing, his greater command over "idiomatic English" is of no use to his pupils. Because in the class-room he remains for a very short time, and during that time as an Englishman his teaching of an English book may be of greater value to his students than that of a Native head-master. Yet the difference between the two is not such as to make any the difference between the two is not such as to make any marked difference between students brought up under one and those under the other. We make bold to say that if there were a sprinkling of English boys in each class-room of our high schools, the Native boys would profit more than they have ever profited under an average English head-master.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR BURMA. (Pioneer.)

We do not think Sir Charles Bernard has a whit over-estimated the future of Burma when he stated that in twenty years' time it would be the most prosperous, the best educated, and the most go-ahead province in India. It is already, probably in the matter of the "three R's," far in advance of any other province, for the Buddhist priests are so numerous, and their educational system so universal, that the majority of the people can read, write, and cypher. High education on the Western model has already spread its influence, to ssme extent, over Pegu, and it will gradually embrace Upper Burma as the country settles down. The raw material on which educationalists have to work is of the best, for the Burman, even of the lower ranks, is intelligent and observant, though apt to take life a little too easily. As to the material prosperity of the country there can be little doubt that it is making great the day and a great of the country there was a construction of the country there is a constructio strides already, and as money flows into the new province its natural resources will be rapidly developed. It has a magnificent river highway, giving free communication from Bhamo to the sea; and a subsidiary stream, the Chindwin, which can be navigated for several hundred miles above Ahlon. Its minutes wealth is unquestionably great: its teak forests are unrivalled: navigated for several hundred miles above Ahlon. Its mineral wealth is unquestionably great; its teak forests are unrivalled; and millions of acres are lying ready for cultivation, if only a population for them can be found. Its great want, at present, is means of communication inland; but the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway is being pushed on; a survey for another line between Kendat and Sagain (which may eventually be linked on to the Indian systems, via Manipur) is contemplated, and main trunk-roads with feeders are being made. The Shates are being opened out on the east, and trade is sure to develop in this direction, while every endeavour is being made to revive the past commercial greatness of Bhamo as an entredevelop in this direction, while every endeavour is being made to revive the past commercial greatness of Bhamo as an entrepôt for Yunnan. The expense of government must undoubtedly be heavy until complete pacification has been attained; but year by year this will grow lighter, and the drain upon the local revenues will decrease. For years past Lower Burma has contributed a crore of rupees to the Imperial Exchequer in India; it will continue to do so under the provincial contract, but, as that exchequer bears the cost of the military and police expenditure in the Upper Province, Burma as a whole gets a quid pro quo.

For the first ten years it is to pay the Government Rs. 21 for every ton of plumbago taken, and for the remaining ten years, the rate is to be Rs. 5 per ton. The company is to begin mining operations in the two taluks of Nedoovugad and Sherayingil within three years from date.

BURMA.

THE operations in Burma during the last week of the old year have been singularly successful. Many Bohs have been captured and their bands dispersed, while not a few others have voluntarily surrendered. The dacoit leaders are evidently beginning to recognise the true strength of the Government, as well as its resolve to destroy the old Burman passion for plunder and marauding. These Bohs have long been looked on as heroes by the Burman villagers, honoured by the men and loved by the maidens, and it is impossible to over-estimate the moral effect which their voluntary surrender will produce on the general population.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH AND PUNJAB.

The institution of Golf among the local sports at Lahore is being seriously discussed. There is said to be an excellent piece of ground available between the Canal and the Racecourse, which would be a very convenient central locality between Lahore and Mian Mir. It is a wonder that Golf is not much more popular in India. Suitable ground for links abounds—especially in the Punjab—and it would be hard to name a form of exercise more suitable for the Indian climate.

Local self-government has not been an unqualified success in the Punjab. Some time ago the local government were com-pelled to abolish the election system in the municipality of Hoshiarpore and reintroduce nomination, as the Native members were constantly quarrelling among themselves. Now it is said that the elective system has also had to be abolished in the municipality of Kushab for much the same reason. One of the Native papers admits that, quite apart from the rivalry between Hindoos and Mahomedans, misunderstandings exist between members of the same religion. Some members are lazy and do nothing, while others exert themselves solely for their own private ends and aggrandisement.

An outcome of the suit brought by Mr. Johnson, a contractor, late of Allahabad, against the Government of India, to recover a large sum stated to be due to him in connection to recover a large sum stated to be due to him in connection with the building of the new Public Offices at Simla, has been that the plaintiff has been called on to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury. It would appear that, during the trial of the above case, Mr. Henderson, the Government Advocate, desired the District Court to commit Mr. Johnson, but that the Judge declined. The matter was then brought before the Commissioner's Court, with the result above mentioned.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH OF INDIA.

At a meeting of the Society of Arts, held on Friday at John-street, Adelphi, under the presidency of Sir Douglas Galton, a paper was read by Mr. Justice Cunningham, of the High Court of Judicature, Bengal, on "the Public Health of India." He said that he stood there as the representative of an association which had for some years past made the public health in India its especial care. It would be their views that he would submit, and those of the Army Sanitary Comthat he would submit, and those of the Army Sanitary Commission. The lecturer then gave a short sketch of the sanitary position in India, and what had been already achieved in the way of prevention of disease, and to examine how far it was possible, with the existing administrative machinery, to extend to the population of India the benefits, which, during the last 50 years, sanitary improvements had achieved for the people of England. The population of which health statistics were collected, and about which anything was known, was something under 200,000,000. It spread over an area of 881,000 square miles, about as large as Europe without Russia, with local varieties of climate, rainfall, soil, national habits, and character as pronounced as any as could be found among the various European States. The vast aggregate of nations was for the most part scattered about in villages, and the collections of houses dignified by the name of towns had but few of the characteristics of order or beauty of the European city. With the exception of Calcutta and Bombay and a few more, they were but aggregates of houses, crowded pell-mellintonarrow they were but aggregates of houses, crowded pell-mellintonarrow they were but aggregates of houses, crowded pell-mell into narrow lanes, with cesspools under them which received the sewage, and wells which were largely indebted to the cesspools. Coming to figures, he must premise that those which he employed were in a high degree untrustworthy, the results showing by their variations how little they were deserving of implicit confidence. Thus they had a registered birth-rate which varied from 45 per mille in the Central Provinces, 43 in Berar, and 41 in the North-West Provinces, to 25 in Bengal and Burma. One district in the North-West Provinces one of 7 and Burma. One district in the North-West Provinces showed a birth-rate of 53, while a district in Bengal showed one of 7. There were, in 1885, 5,000,000 deaths registered in British India, giving a ratio of 26 per mille. But this result was derived from wide variations—from 16 per mille in some provinces to 34 in others—the highest of these rates being largely exceeded in some considerable areas. On this mortality the Army Sanitary Commission, after analysing its causes, said that "We learn from this table that above 78 per cent. of the entire registered mortality was due to mitigable or preventable diseases," and in the next place, in viewing the figures since 1876, they observed that, setting aside the abnormal effects of the great famine of that and the following year, the deaths from cholera showed a tendency to increase. The smallpox mortality presents the usual epidemic character, and so pox mortality presents the usual epidemic character, and so does that of cholera, with a marked tendency to augmentation, is also apparently increasing. Examining the cholera mortality, Mr. Cunningham said that there appeared to be no doubt that the special home of cholera with a region of which Calcutta might roughly be described as the centre. The disease had been present in an epidemic form for thirteen out of the last twenty years in Europe, and on grounds of the public safety of the world, no less than in its capacity of benevolent administrator, the Indian Government were bound, now that the means of obliterating cholera were perfectly understood, to provide that neither the shortcomings of its own officials, nor the ignorance and shortsightedness of the public bodies which it had called into existence and invested with such important powers, should be allowed to convert large areas in India into a nursing ground for the propagation of the disease and its dissemination to other parts of the world. Cholera was, however, as a great destructive agent, local and temporary—the great, universal, and constant destroyer was fever. To this nearly three and a half millions of deaths were credited by the registering authorities in 1885. The rates in some years in Europe, and on grounds of the public safety of the by the registering authorities in 1885. The rates in some parts of Northern India were terrible; the Delhi district, for instance, showed in 1885 an annual death-rate from fever of 36 in 1,000, and some of the villages about the Western Jumna Canal rates at 35 and 42 per mille. Smallpox, which had cost more than one and a half millions of lives in the decade 1876-85, and more than a quarter of a million in 1883 and 1884, was at present in one of its quiescent periods, a certain amount of protection being afforded by vaccination. We had reduced our national death-rate from rates as high as those now prevailing in India to one of 19 per mille; we had reduced the death-rate of London (once 50 per mille) to the same; we had reduced the rates of many localities much lower. Could a similar improvement be effected in India? On this point they had the advantage of several instances of the utmost value. The British Army of 50,000 to 60,000, and the Native of 100,000, and the gaols with a population of 80,000 and 100,000, had for years past been under close observation. The average ratio of annual deaths of European troops in India had for some commission appointed after the Crimean war ranged as high as 69 per mille; at some unhealthy stations the ratio was 115 decade 1876-85, and more than a quarter of a million in 1883 as 69 per mille; at some unhealthy stations the ratio was 115 per mille. The annual death ratio for the European Army in India for the last four years ranged between 12 and 141 per mille. As regarded some particular diseases the improvement had been signal. With regard to the prisons, the highest of the ratio in 1885 was scarcely more than a third of the former ratio, the lowest being under 18 per mille. To these facts of the army, the gaol, and what had been done in Calcutta before them, it was impossible to doubt the conclusion that a very large mortality of India was in the strictest sense preventible—in other words, that it arose from certain ascertained condilarge mortality of India was in the strictest sense preventible—in other words, that it arose from certain ascertained conditions, which it was within the practical competence of the community to alleviate, or if not altogether remove. The first essential, in his opinion, for the reform of sanitation in India was the constitution in each presidency of an authority competent to superintend the executive by the carrying out of the reforms, the necessity of which was shown by the inspecting and statistical branch; a commission at the headquarters of each presidency as would convert the sanitary supervision of the country into a reality. Another deficiency of the sanitary the country into a reality. Another deficiency of the sanitary administration was in respect of scientific research and experiment. It was indispensable that there should be in the east of India a department consisting of a staff sufficiently able and numerous, and provided with the necessary resources to conduct with the constant of the staff sufficiently able and numerous, and provided with the necessary resources to conduct with the sufficient of the staff sufficient staff s duct scientific investigations into disease, with all the precision and elaborate completeness necessary to such inquiries; and for this it was necessary that the attractions of the department for this it was necessary that the attractions of the department and its prospects of promotion should be sufficient to draw into it a sufficient number of able men, who would be prepared to find their career in it, and to abandon the chance of professional success in other directions. In conclusion, Mr. Cunningham said that we had in these islands 37,000,000 of people, a large portion of whom lived in a degree of comfort which princes could not centuries are dream of the properst people, a large portion of whom lived in a degree of comfort which princes could not, centuries ago, dream of, the poorest of whom were well off as compared with the poor of those days. The great epidemics had disappeared, the cholera stood baffled at our shores, life, to the great mass of us, was longer, brighter, happier, more exempt from the dreadful vicissitudes. They believed that a similar future was in store for their fellow-subjects in India, and they appealed to the enlightened public opinion of England to aid in the endeavour to hasten the consummation of this long wished for result.

The Chairman in opening the discussion said that if the causes which favoured the growth of cholera in India were removed, the prevalence of other preventable diseases would also be greatly modified. No doubt the conditions which prevailed in India were more difficult to remove than in Europe, but they had had for years admirable reports on the sanitary condition of India, and all these reports concurred in saying that cholera occurred only where sanitary conditions were defective, and that cholera did not occur in the presence of good sanitation—in fact, the very same conditions which produced cholera in England also produced it in India. The establishment of some system of enforced sanitation was a duty which Government owed to the people of India. Improved health meant increased powers of production, and increased happiness. It was a duty which the English Government owed to the world was a duty which the English Government owed to the world to prevent India from being the breeding-ground as well as the hotbed for the propagation of cholera. (Hear, hear.)

Sir George Campbell said he was entirely opposed to the idea that cholera was a preventable disease. He had no doubt that the common-sense of sanitary condition did much to prevent cholera, as it did much to prevent other diseases, but he altogether disbelieved that they could put a stop to cholera, and he must depresent a presuggestion that the Government of and he must deprecate any suggestion that the Government of India had at all neglected its duty in this matter. THE [losses among the cavalry horses of the regiments in Burma last year amounted to nearly one-half of the total strength. According to the latest estimates, the 3rd Hyderabad Contingent have lost 350 horses, the 1st Madras Lancers 275, the 7th Bengal Cavalry 220, and the 1st Bengal Lancers 200. It is expected that the Government will grant compensation to the content of Page 200 for each borne but sation to the men to the extent of Rs. 200 for each horse, but as most of the animals cost from Rs. 350 to Rs. 400, the loss to the Chanda funds will be very large, while the expense to be borne by the State will exceed two lakhs of rupees. THE Bangalore Spectator hears from independent sources that it is in contemplation to reduce the Bangalore Division to a brigade, creating the Eastern District into a Division with its head-quarters at Fort St. George. It also believes that the proposed scheme will take place from 1st April, when Bangalore will have a Brigadier-General commanding. The offices of Assistant Adjutant - General and Assistant Quartermaster-General will be abolished, and in their stead an officer, not below the rank of Captain, will hold the combined Brigade appointments with a Station Staff Officer to assist. THE VOLUNTEERS AND THE REGULARS.—It is often com-THE VOLUNTEERS AND THE REGULARS.—It is often complained that Volunteers in India get the coldest of cold shoulders from the "Regular Army," who do not, perhaps, fully realise the self-sacrifice which is involved before the capitation grant can be gained. The Government, it is true, are loud in praise of volunteering and encourage it among their servants; individual inspecting officers are at times moved to express their appreciation of the efficiency of particular corps; but, taken all round, there is a sad lack of interest among the Army in India regarding Volunteers and their work. This is no new complaint: it is almost as old as the movement This is no new complaint; it is almost as old as the movement itself, though officers still living remember what splendid ser-vice scratch bodies of Volunteers did in the Mutiny. But, luckily, we have not a common danger always at hand to draw men to each other; and in the piping times of peace other means must be found of bringing the two services closer together. In the Presidency District, General Purvis has during the past two or three weeks quite won the hearts of the Volunteers by allowing their artillery to fire important salutes, an innovation which may make many an old gunner turn in his grave. But General Purvis belongs to the "Royal Regiment" himself, and he is not likely to have made so novel a departure without good cause. On the New Year Parade at Calcutta the Volunteer Artillery fired the salute under the eye of the Commander. in-Chief, and his Excellency was not slow to show his satisfaction with the manner in which the guns were handled. These may be small matters after all, but they are none the less welcome to Volunteers, who usually feel themselves left out in the cold save on two or three parades in the year. The Calcutta Volunteer Naval Artillery are now said to be bent upon doubling their strength by next New Year's Day; they are as smart a body of men as could be wished, and could really take their place with credit side by side with the genuine Salt, who occasionally finds himself one of a gun-team on shore.—Pioneer.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

Not a few people, holding the nominal position of "Statesmen," but nowise men on whom the State can rely for intelligent service, seem to be of opinion that the British Constitution is (to use Hudibrastic phrase)-

> "intended For nothing else than to be mended."

They have been (and would fain continue to be) perpetually tinkering at it. The tinkering has, oftener than not, been by no means of the best quality, and has almost invariably been applied to the wrong places. The last threatened piece of tinkering is, not the closing, but the opening, of an aperture; of one large enough to admit women to the franchise, and, eventually, to Parliament and to Cabinet Office. This attempt Professor Goldwin Smith denounces in a stronger and outgook on Parkey which stands first in order This attempt Professor Goldwin Smith denounces in a vigorous and outspoken Paper, which stands first in order in the present issue of the National Review. Reminding us that every "extension of the suffrage is a new distribution of the supreme power" which, to all intents and purposes, resides in the House of Commons; that this power has, by "that fatal policy of intrigue and legerdemain which took the place of British statesmanship" after 1846, and which brought the Conservative party "and the country with it through dishonour to the brink of ruin," the brilliant writes till holds that to the much-abused Conservative party must fall the duty of replacing matters on a proper basis. Change, fall the duty of replacing matters on a proper basis. Change, for the sake of outbidding political opponents, has gone all too far. It has hitherto been political; but the admission of women to the franchise would not only be a political, but, as is ably set forth, a social change, involving the abandonment by women of their patural sphere the home in order to applie by women of their natural sphere, the home in order to enable them to encroach on that wider sphere which nature has obviously designed for the special peculium of the rougher sex.

The stirring question of what is known as "Fair Trade" is dismissed in a few almost contemptuous words by Lord Ebrington. It may, however, be pointed out that fiscal re-arrangement, sufficient, but not more than sufficient, to arrest arrangement, sufficient, but not more than sufficient, to arrest the lamentable decline of nearly every British industry, need not, of necessity, either increase the price of bread, or damage the Unionist cause. Opinions will, of course, differ as to the precise manner of readjustment. Among other suggestions, Mr. G. Holloway, the Conservative member for Stroud, in an article, which should be carefully read as a kind of anticipatory reply to the noble member for Tavistock, puts forward the proposal to "protect our own manufacturing industries by imposing a customs duty on every description of foreign manufactures, and to devote the whole of the revenue thus obtained factures, and to devote the whole of the revenue thus obtained to the relief and encouragement of agriculture." Mr. Holloway's statistics, gathered from official returns, are startling, and well merit attention.

The irrepressible Irish question is the subject of two papers, the one, Mr. Reade's "Visit to a Kerry Nationalist," showing the real objects of the "Nationalist" party; the other, by Dr. Anthony Traill, on the "Irish Landholders' Convention," stating, in emphatic words, the case of the landlords, who, while receiving, in many cases, no rent whatever, are compelled by law to pay the poor-rates on all holdings valued at, or under fa per annum and the helf of the rate (when they can under, £4 per annum, and the half of the rate (when they can recover it from the tenant) on larger holdings. On one estate, recover it from the tenant) on larger holdings. On one estate, he tells us, "on which no rents have been paid for some time, out of 750 holdings some 710 are under £4 in valuation."

Lady John Manners, who contributes a cheery little paper Lady John Manners, who contributes a cheery little paper to prove that "rich landowners" are not, as on Gladstonian platforms they are bound to be, "idle," need not, fortunately, disabuse the readers of the National of any errors on this head: the multifarious, and often onerous, duties which devolve on, and are usually right well performed by, these much envied, and much abused, individuals, are such as to an are their resistions the reverse of a right well.

Mr. H. D. Traill, treating of "The Evolution of Humour," endeavours to persuade us that, in its inception, it is a pleasure derived from other peoples' inferiority (real or fancied) to ourselves, and from their mishaps as evidencing that inferiority; though he might have remembered the "Suave mari magno" of Lucretius, as an argument that we rather congratulate ourselves on our own exemption from misfortunes, than rejoice in those of others. To this clever writer, the origin of humour

Mr. Henniker Heaton celebrates, with the interest of an old colonist, the "centenary of Australia," quoting, most appropriately, Wentworth's fine lines, written for the Chancellor's Prize at Cambridge; while Mr. A. Innes Shand has an eminently readable paper on the "Centenary of the Times."

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.*

All who have attentively perused Fergusson's important work on the "History of Indian and Eastern Architecture," a subject all but untouched until taken in hand by that eminent and truly practical writer, will remember the great pains with which he endeavours to elucidate the origin of the various with which he endeavours to elucidate the origin of the various forms of architecture. Many of his suggestions are avowedly but tentative, and he looked to further explorations and discoveries as a means of confirming their accuracy, or of setting them aside if erroneous. Mr. W. Simpson—himself no mean worker in this field of research—has lately paid a visit to Persia and the Afghan Frontier, and, having travelled, as Opie said that he mixed his colours, "with brains," has communicated, partly as the result of his peregrinations, some interesting "Suggestions of Origin in Indian Architecture," which, with accompanying illustrations, are given in the present issue of the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal. He deals, in the first instance, with the origin of the formation of "barrel-roofs," and points out a very striking similarity of construction as with accompanying illustrations, are given in the present issue of the Royal Asiatic Society's Journal. He deals, in the first instance, with the origin of the formation of "barrel-roofs," and points out a very striking similarity of construction as still practised among the Todas, an aboriginal tribe of Southern India in the lowest possible stage of civilisation. Among the same people is found the Boath, a round temple with a conical steeple, under a stone on the top of which—of all conceivable places!—the temple-relics are kept; and Mr. Simpson suggests, not without plausibility, that here we have the primitive form of the amalaka which surmounts the sikhara of a Hindu temple, and of which Fergusson had with rare perceptive power, divined that it "either was, or simulated, a relic-casket." Mr. Simpson's paper is eminently readable, and well repays perusal.

The Chaghatai Mughals form the subject of a carefully-prepared monograph by Mr. E. E. Oliver, who traces their history in detail from the time of Chengiz Khan (A.D. 1175) to that of Timur (A.D. 1379), a period of over 200 years. That the history is one of continual treachery and bloodshed is merely to say that it is the history of Tartars; there is, however, much in the Paper which is both interesting and instructive; and it gathers together in a small compass what lies scattered in many bulky tomes.

The career and writings of that wonderful man, Albiruni, are learnedly treated by Sir F. J. Goldsmid in an exhaustive review of Professor Edward Sachau's recent edition of Albiruni's work on India. The learned Professor justly points to Albiruni's treatise as "phenomenal in the history of Eastern civilisation. Muhammadans," he says, "will learn, besides their mother tongue, also Arabic and Persian; but that a Muslim should take up the study of a foreign language, outside the range of Islam, simply for scientific purposes, seems next to incredible." Familiar, it would seem, alike with Jewish and with Christian writings, Albiruni presents that very type, of an in terms of high praise, may soon be looked for in an English

The researches of the late M. Guyard and of Professor D. H. Müller, of Vienna, together with contributions from other quarters, "not only add," says Professor Sayce in an article on "The Cuneiform Inscriptions of Van" "to our knowledge of the Vannic vocabulary, but enable us to amend our old readings." The learned Professor, applying to his own former writings the increased knowledge thus acquired, is in a position to make considerable and important contributions. is in a position to make considerable and important corrections in the decipherment of the inscriptions. These are given, with the improved readings, and a translation, at pages 21—32, and appended to them is an "Alphabetical List of New Words and Corrected Explanations," which will be found invaluable by those who may be desirous of further pursuing the subject.

NEO-HELLENIC MANUL.+

Modern Greek, popularly termed Romanic, but more strictly designated Neo-Hellenic, possesses more than one claim to general study. In the first place, it is the vernacular of about fifteen millions of persons inhabiting the important regions of Greece, Bulgaria, Albania, Asia Minor, the Ionian Islands, Cyprus, Palestine, and various isolated portions of the Turkish Empire. In addition to this it forms an excellent introduction to the study of the classical language. But over and above all a familiarity with the Neo-Hellenic dielect will enable the student of the New Testament to understand many obscure and difficult passages in that portion of Holy Writ. Dr. Tien has, therefore, done well in turning his attention in this direction; and his work, though unpretentious in its scope, merits tion; and his work, though unpretentious in its scope, merits the praise due to simplicity and clearness. In a singularly interesting and suggestive preface this polyglot linguist points out that "the processes suitable for the study of a dead language may be quite unfit for the acquisition of a colloquial knowledge of a living language." Grammar is all very well in its way, but what is wanted at the first onset is just sufficient knowledge of the general rules which govern the construction of sentences without any attempt to analyse "theoretical niceties," which latter are always "forgotten when wanted." This is just what the present manual does. There are a mass of plain, ordinary sentences, suitable to the requirements of everyday life, prefaced by just so much of the outlines of grammar as is inherently necessary to avoid mistakes and attain accuracy. But pedantry is relegated to the regions of non-existence; simplicity is the order of the day, and the result is a work suitable for the general public, who, provided they can express their wants and wishes inday, and the result is a work suitable for the general public, who, provided they can express their wants and wishes intelligibly and with freedom, care little for ornate elegance of diction, or the polished phraseology of "high art." Dr. Tien is one of the few scholars who know how to throw aside scholarship, and teach the people in a way "understanded" of the many, rather than loved by the few; and it may be hoped his readers will come from the many-headed oi polloi rather than from the select minority whose numbers are not sufficient. than from the select minority whose numbers are not sufficient to render their patronage of much moment from a commercial point of view.

Mr. Portman tells his readers that there is no work extant on the various dialects of the Andanamese. This circumstance, on the various dialects of the Andanamese. This circumstance, while it must have considerably added to the difficulty of paring a manual of this language, increases enormously the value of the work just published. The plan adopted is well suited to the purpose of general utility with which the book was undertaken. There is, in the first place, a brief outline of the laws and rules of grammar plainly told, with just sufficient detail to make them useful, and with not enough minuteness to create ennui and a feeling of despair. Then follows an English Andanamese lexicon, comprising all the leading words in general use. The knowledge gained in these two lectures is then applied in the shape of dialogues on various matters of everyday life. Lastly, there are lists of articles of food, of manufacture, &c., and of the principal trees in the Andaman Jungle. We do not pretend to criticise the accuracy and trustworthiness of the scholarship, but we do not think there is much room for anxiety on this head. Mr. Portman has served for some years in the islands in question; he was specially selected by the Chief Commissioner to undertake the task he has just completed; and the public may, with confidence, rely upon the soundness of knowledge possessed by a gentleman who produces such favourable credentials and such high testimonials to his capacity and learning. while it must have considerably added to the difficulty of pre-

The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine for February is by far the best number which has appeared for a lengthened time, and Mr. Fisher Unwin may be congratulated upon the circumstance that not only has he realised, but he appears to circumstance that not only has he realised, but he appears to have made his confrères across the Atlantic realise, that an Anglo-American Journal must not be exclusively "Yankee." The favours should be equally divided between new and old England. Having written thus much we proceed to argue against ourselves by stating that by far the most interesting and attractive article is entitled "Ranch Life in the Far West," but others follow close on its heels. "Pictorial Art on the Stage" is first-rate. Little inferior is a "Russian Political Prison," proclaiming the cruel villanies of a most villanous despotism. Lastly—perhaps it should have been said firstly—an essay on Astrology, divination and coincidencies, summarises an immense amount of wisdom and bearing on this most abstruse and debatable science.

INDIA IN CASE OF A EUROPEAN WAR.

THE war clouds appear to be gathering over Europe. In spite of all promises, assurances, and protestations of goodwill which were so prolifically interchanged amongst crowned heads and political leaders at Christmas time. it would seem that with the coming spring the bloodhounds of war are to be let loose, and nations of civilised Europe are to commence the work of cutting one another's throats. The prospect is terrible to think of. Although for a long time past Europe has been distracted by rumours of conflict-although the Great Powers have been increasing their armaments and keeping their arsenals working to the full-although, indeed, the Continent has partaken almost of the nature of a huge military camp on the eve of battle, there were sanguine natures who hoped that the morrow would bring peace, not war. That hope, we are now being warned on all sides, is likely to be disappointed, and that as soon as the weather becomes favourable for military operations the signal of battle will be given, and the din of clashing arms will resound throughout Europe. And it must be allowed that the evil omens are significant. It cannot be on any idle or unsubstantial grounds of suspicion that the already overtaxed German people have agreed without a murmur to the burden of an additional fourteen millions sterling being placed upon them in order that 700,000 more soldiers may be called to the standards of the Fatherland. Austro-Hungary has made itself ready for war, and believes that war is inevitable. Russia, using the diplomatic language of peace to conceal her real intentions, as has always been herpolicy, is practically doing everything to provoke a contest. The latest intelligence to the effect that the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople is about to leave his postfor Athens, with the object, no doubt, of securing a Greek alliance against Turkey, is an augury which can bear only one interpretation. It is all very well to read that "thereis not the slightest ground for doubting that the Allied Powers are making a bond fide endeavour to maintain. peace for their own defence," but circumstances often prove stronger than individuals. No one believes that the aged Emperor of Germany desires war; it is difficult. to believe that the Emperor of Russia personally does soeither; Austro-Hungary has no reason for desiring it, and the Republic of France must have the work of consolidation rather than that of conflict at heart. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the general opinion of the Press throughout Europe is that war is imminent.

The situation is one which, of course, must be takeninto grave consideration by English statesmen. It is satisfactory to think that Lord Salisbury has led thiscountry into no alliance, defensive or otherwise, with any other nation, and that she stands free and unpledged. This is as it should be. "England," as Lord Palmerston said long ago, "knows no cousins." The fact of all the Continental nations being engaged in a great attempt to murder each other does not necessitate any active interference on our part. We may regret the circumstance, but the business is not ours. This does not signify, however, that the attitude of England should be one of careless or cynical indifference. She has interests at stake which may at any moment be jeopardised, and these interests she must be ready to protect at all hazards. The questions which are now agitating our contemporaries concerning the state of preparedness we are in for war we need not enter into now in these columns. Lord Charles-Beresford and Sir Charles Dilke may both be correct in the pessimist views which they have made public to the world regarding the absolute inefficiency of our army and navy. We hope those views are not quite correct, but this is beside our present purpose. The question with which we are now immediately concerned is the position in which India would be placed in case of our being dragged into dispute with any of the great Powers. If the flame of war breaks out, as it threatens to do, in Southern Europe, Russia will have quite enough upon her hands without attempting that much-dreaded invasion of India, which in certain quarters seems to be the only fear entertained regarding the safety and security of our Indian Empire. So, for the present, that fear may be banished from even M. Vambéry's mind. But to those gentlemen who hold that the whole attention of the Authorities here and in India. should be concentrated upon the construction of defensive lines on the North-West Frontier and the laying down of strategic railways, we would say, what about the sea ports of India? What about Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, and Kurrachee? Is no thought to be taken regarding their defence? The fortifications at Aden, we are told, are "progressing." But what about the fortifications of the ports we have mentioned, and which are at the mercy of any single cruiser-for it is a farce to call any naval protection now afforded to them a defence? Surely the safe-guarding of these important places is as much a necessity as the placing of boundary pillars on the Afghanistan border, or strengthening the defences of the North-West

Yet this is a matter which seems to be treated by even the most rabid of Russophobists as a matter of no consequence at all!

THE DEFENCE OF OUR COALING STATIONS.

Lord Brassey, who returned a few weeks ago from a voyage extending over 30,000 miles, addressed the London Chamber of Commerce on the 25th inst. on the subject of the defences of the Empire. He dealt with the unprotected state of the coaling stations, and pointed out the steps that ought to be taken at once for the protection of our merchant steps that ought to be taken at once for the protection of our merchant navy and colonial possessions in time of war. A resolution was passed by which the Chamber emphatically recorded its opinion that the Government ought to increase their efforts to render the defences of the various ocean routes thoroughly efficient, so as to avoid the otherwise inevitable spasmodic and costly expenditure in time of war. The Duke of Cambridge supported this view with various arguments. The bill, he said, would be a long one if the necessary works were done. The Duke remarked that a politican who was pressed to spend the money would "do quite right" if he refused, because if he agreed he might be turned out of office. It was therefore necessary that commercial men should take up the question. Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., also addressed the Chamber, and explained somewhat the reason why he had left the Admiralty. He believed that when he had given, as he will to-night, his full explanation, he will have the services and the taxpayers with him.

Lord Brassey said of Singapore that there we find a noble centre of Lord Brassey said of Singapore that there we find a noble centre of trade, created as if by the enchanter's wand, under the British flag— the accepted emblem for all uncivilised and half-civilised races of justhe accepted emblem for all uncivilised and half-civilised races of justice, order, security, and unrestricted freedom of commerce. Singapore is a naval station which we are bound to secure, and here the colonial Government have carried out an extensive scheme of defence planned by officers of the Royal Engineers. At the period of my visit the guns which are promised by the Imperial Government had not yet arrived. For the manning of the works the limited force of British artillery on the station must be supplemented by a native force. Singapore has a splendid battalion of 1,000 Sikh police, who could be trained to work the guns. A volunteer artillery corps is proposed, and would be splendid battalion of 1,000 Sikh police, who could be trained to work the guns. A volunteer artillery corps is proposed, and would be valuable. The torpedo defences are, I believe, completed. In addition to the shore defences and the torpedoes, one or more ironclads are required for the protection of the anchorage. I observe with satisfaction that the Orion has been stationed by the present Board of Admiralty in those waters. Taking a long stretch round Borneo, where a small vessel, partly manned by a native crew, might with advantage be stationed to complete surveys, to maintain order, and to show the flag, and passing on through the Straits of Macassar and across the Southern Indian Ocean, we arrive at King George's Sound. Speaking of docks he said: A grant should be made for the enlargement of the existing docks at Bombay by the Indian Government and at Singapore and Mauritius by Bombay by the Indian Government and at Singapore and Mauritius by the Imperial Government. Foreign nations look with envy on the splendid resources which British commerce creates at no cost to the splendid resources which British commerce creates at no cost to the taxpayers. During the war in China, until the provisions of the Foreign Establishment Act were enforced, the French fleet was mainly dependent on our pricate ship-repairing yards at Hong Kong; and M. Weyl has told us of their conspicuous superiority over the limited resources which were found to exist when the French squadron was compelled to fall back on the national establishment at Saigon. The Dutch squadron in the East is dependent on private docks at Singapore.

Lord Charles Beresford, who was invited to address the meeting, was received with prolonged applause. He said the gist of Lord Brassey's paper was organisation, organisation, organisation, that was to say, "Get ready what you have got." He held that the views of the experts of the two Services should be placed before the Treasury by the party-head that was responsible for these views, and he objected altogether to the Minister of War, however able he might be, going to the Treasury and saying "The War Office says so and so, and the Admiralty says so and so," when the War Office and the Admiralty said nothing of the sort.

TURNING THE BRITISH FLANK IN ASIA.

Under this heading a correspondent contributes a lengthy letter to The Times. A great part deals with the journeys of Mr. H. E. M. James and Lieutenant Younghusband. The following conclusion is, however, interesting:

James and Lieutenant Younghusband. The following conclusion is, however, interesting:—

There is one aspect of the case which has a peculiar charm to the Mandarin mind. No Asiatic or semi-Asiatic State—certainly not Turkey, and probably not Japan—has more thoroughly studied or more successfully practised the delicate art of playing off one European Power against another. English, French, Germans have all been employed in turn by China to build her arsenals, to sail her ships, and to drill her troops. Each nation has in turn fancied that it was to become the predominating foreign influence at Peking. China has in turn used each, paid each, and dismissed each, filling their places with men of other European nations, and shuffling "the foreign devils" about like a pack of cards. She now sees that the game which she has hitherto played so dexterously in the reorganisation of her forces must also be played in her foreign policy. She appreciates the dangers of the feat, but she has a well-founded confidence in her own sleight of hand. Nor does she permit her pardonable amusement in the shifts and tricks of each successive deal to obscure her perception as to the main chance. She has found that English officials have a permanent talent for raising revenue and a curiously permanent honesty in handing over the proceeds to the Imperial Treasury. She therefore keeps the Customs-house under the permanent control of Englishmen. She has found that the English Government is not disposed to make territorial annexations, but that it can inflict severe punishment when provoked. On the other hand, she perceives that Russia's definite principle of policy is to advance southwards—a policy pursued at the expense of China with unswerving consistency, although with temporary reverses, during two cen turies and a-half. China clearly perceives that the game of exclusiveness is up, so far as regards external trade. What she now endeavours to do is to make the intrusive commodities as profitable as possible to her own exchequer. On the other hand, she sees that the problem now before her is to keep the foreigner, not out of her ports, but out of her territories. Lord Dufferin has dealt skilfully with this new idea which is growing to be the ruling idea at Peking. He abandoned a commercial mission to Thibet as soon as China became really apprehensive that it had a territorial significance. While insisting on our absolute rights as sovereigns of Upper Burmah, he scrupulously respected the Chinese claims to a nominal show of deference from the possessors of that country; and he is ready to settle frontier questions on strictly just principles. At the same time the new Opium Convention, while fraught with grave possible consequences to the Indian finances, forms a substantial pledge that while we are determined to trade with China, we are willing to submit our trade to such fiscal regulations as we would submit to if we were dealing with any other friendly and powerful ally. England's action to China, both by her representatives at Peking and through her Vicerroy of India, has during many years proceeded on the principle of fairly enforcing the position we have won, and of desiring nothing further. We were determined to secure open ports. Having secured them we are willing to use our advantage in a lawful and conciliatory manner. We have no desire for territorial extensions at the cost of China, and we have in regard to our new Burmese possessions abstained—as some think even too carefully abstained—from any action which would wound her self-respect. At the same time the fate of Burmalı has shown to China in an unmistakable manner that when the duty of conquest is thrust upon us we can swiftly and surely conquer. China is learning the lesson that Afghanistan has learned—namely, that we insist upon fair and friendl

In a leader on the subject the same journal writes in the following optimistic strain:—After all, the really interesting thing is that Russia, like ourselves, is busily engaged in stirring up the Chinese, and that neither she nor we can tell in the very least what will happen when we have succeeded. China is governed, we hardly know how, but she manages to find very astute rulers, and is adapting herself to meet new dangers in a slow, solid, characteristic fashion, from which more is to expected in the long run than from the more rapid evolutions of the Japanese. When once she is convinced that exclusiveness will no longer work, she is not by any means a bad neighbour, or difficult to deal with. At present the Chinese are merely taking object lessons. They are not in a hurry, and they are wise. We have a suspicion that, backward as people think them, they have got hold of one educational principle which this go-ahead nation has never grasped. They know that you cannot graft an education at will upon minds unprepared for its reception by inherited aptitudes and the breathing of an educated atmosphere from the cradle. Upon the whole, we have a strong impression that a generation or two hence very few nations will be in any lurry to fight the Chinese, and that, if the Russians can get to India only across Western China, India is tolerably safe. When China is thoroughly wakened up in matters of commerce, as well as in matters of diplomacy and war, there will be some curious results for the journalists of the future to chronicle.

EXPLORATIONS IN NEPAUL AND THIBET'.

The exploration of the regions lying to the north and west of the Indian frontier has always been a difficult task, the inhabitants viewing with great jealousy any attempt by Europeans to penetrate into their countries. The last exploration carried out by Indian emissaries of the Survey Department is (The Times says) one made by a native called M——H., who traversed some previously unknown tracts in Nepaul and Southern Thibet, and whose notes of travel contain points of considerable interest. The explorer crossed the Nepaul boundary near Dagmarathana in Bhagalpur, and after making customary presents, obtained a passport authorising his further progress, which lay northward over the Mahabharat range, one of the spurs of the great Himalayan Mountains. At various points along the route his passport was examined, his goods searched, and a tax exacted from him, and in some cases he had, in addition, to propitiate the local authorities with presents. At Jubang Thibetan inhabitants were met for the first time. Khumbujong, a little west of Mount Everest, is the residence of the Governor of the Khumbu district. The official is a Thibetan, and has held the post for the last thirty years; he receives no pay from the Nepaul Government, but is allowed fifteen per cent. of the net revenue of the district, and pays an annual official visit to Khamandu. For a time the Governor absolutely refused the party permission to proceed northwards by a route which he alleged had never till then been traversed by any Hindostanee or Ghoorka. After curing the wife of the Governor's son of goitre he became a favourite with that personage, and was taken by him in his train when he started on a trading expedition to the north. Thus, after a six weeks' enforced inactivity, the explorer again started on his way. On Sept. 23, near Pangji, the famous deity Takdeo (horse-god), a black rock, in shape like a huge horse, was passed.

Crossing the Pangula Pass over the Himalayas, the height of which he estimated at over 20,000ft., the explorer, after some trouble at a frontier village, succeeded in entering Thibet. He came to the town of Dingri, which consists of about 250 houses. The inhabitants are chiefly Thibetans, though there are five houses belonging to Goorkhas and three or four to Chinamen who have established themselves at this place for trading purposes. The country round is well cultivated, but barley and peas are the only produce. The inhabitants all appear well-to-do; but they seem to suffer a good deal from rheumatism (the altitude is 13,860ft.), induced, no doubt, by the piercing winds which sweep over the plain. On the hill, which rises immediately from the north of the town to a height of about 300ft, stands the stone-built fort occupied by the Daibung and forty Chinese officers, who are in command of about 500 Thibetan soldiers. The Daibung is relieved once in three years, and during his tenure of office is allowed to trade within the limits of his province. There are said to be only three Daibungs in all under the Lhasa Government; of these one resides in Lhasa, another in the Namcho district, and the third at Dingri. The trade in which the Daibung engages, so far as tea and salt are concerned, cannot be characterised as free; the former of these his servants and agents purchase in large quantities at Darchendo, towards China, and the latter in the Thok Jalung district. These articles the men of the district are compelled to take over (in preference to purchasing from traders), giving in return for the salt an equal weight of barley, and for the tea 16 naktangs (a coin consisting of about equal parts of silver and copper valued at a half-rupee) per brick or dum. The tea which the Daibung deals in is of the middling quality (known as Chungja), which can be had from traders at eight naktangs per brick, and as each house in his jurisdiction is compelled to take one brick yearly from the Daibung at the rate mentioned above he realises a large annual revenue under this head. But as regards the salt the varying yield of barley one year with another makes his profits more uncertain. In addition to these two articles he deals in blankets on the same footing as private traders. No gold is to be seen at Dingri; it is much sought after, and many inquiries were made of th

But as regards the salt the varying yield of barley one year with another makes his profits more uncertain. In addition to these two articles he deals in blankets on the same footing as private traders. No gold is to be seen at Dingri; it is much sought after, and many inquiries were made of the explorer as to whether he had any gold, pearls, or coral to dispose of.

The soldiers occupying the Dingri fort are armed with a sword, matchlock, and bow and arrows. The sword is the usual short straight weapon in wooden scabbard met with all over Thibet; the matchlocks are sent from Lhasa, and the bows are made of bamboo, which is brought from Nepaul. The soldiers manufacture their own powder on the spot. Lead is imported from Nepaul and Darjeeling; but as bullet-moulds are unknown, they pour out the molten lead into a long, hollow scoop in the ground, and then clip it into convenient-sized pieces, which are hammered to suit the bores of the guns. The soldiers receive a small yearly pay (about £2 to £2 10s.), and are allowed to engage in agriculture, trade, &c. They are drilled by their Chinese officers every week or so, sometimes on foot, at other times mounted on ponies, which they maintain for themselves, and there are periodic inspections by the Daibung.

It is rumoured in Darjeeling that Messrs. Rothschild are in treaty for securing the whole of the N.B.E.B. and D. H. Railways. Fully reliable particulars, according to the local papers, are not available yet; but it is most probable that rumour this case will be found not very far wrong. The amalgamation would be a public benefit in every way, if only sufficient guarantees are taken (as they probably will be) that there is no enhancement of the existing rates for carriage.

The working of the principle of payment by results in the primary schools of Assam is having its final trial this year. The system last year proved a failure in Kachar. The Gurus in charge of certain selected schools were offered their choice of fixed salaries or payment by results, and if they did not immediately make a success of the latter plan they were compelled to go back to the first. But the rules for payment by results have recently been revised, larger rewards being offered, and the scheme has been made open to all primary schools.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF

INDIA

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally doclle and consorvative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a xenwledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to Journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Idbraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October roached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etalesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 28 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 20th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 18th January; and from Calcutta to the 17th January.

January.

THE only business before the Legislative Council at Calcutta on the 19th January—the Weekly Council-day was the presentation of the Select Committee's Report on the Bill amending the Indian Stamp Act. Details will be found in another column.

It is reported that the Viceroy and Lady Dufferin will visit Cashmere during the spring, but the arrangements are not yet definitely settled.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS will, after all, be present at the Mozufferpore gathering. The Pioneer says that the disappointment among the Behar Light Horse and their friends at his Excellency's change of plan was so great that he could not but be sensible of the implied compliment, and has recast his tour accordingly, so as to allow of a few days in Behar.

LORD AND LIADY REAY after visiting Benares, Lucknow, and Allahabad from Calcutta have returned to Bombay.

THE Duke of Sutherland has arrived at Goa in his yacht Sans Peur.

THE Bishop of Bombay has arrived in Calcutta to attend the Episcopal Conference. The Bishops of Madras and Colombo are also there.

THERE will be some changes in the Calcutta Court during the year, as Mr. Justice Prinsep takes furlough at the end of March, while another civilian judge contemplates retiring altogether.

GENERAL LOWIS, R.A., the Director-General of Ordnance, has inspected the Government Harness and Boot Factories and the woollen mills at Cawnpore.

COLONEL WALKER, R.A., first class ordnance officer in charge of the Harness Factory at Bombay, has also visited some of the factories at Cawapore.

Brigade-Surgeon Chesnate is confirmed as Examiner of Medical Accounts in Bengal.

COLONEL H. P. PEACOCK, Political Agent at Ulwar, will succeed to the appointment of Resident in Nepal when Mr. Girdlestone goes on leave, as he does shortly.

Mr. FITZGERALD having taken an extension of leave, Mr. L. W. King, now Political Officer with the Maharaja of Mysore on tour, will succeed Mr. F. L. Petre as First Assistant in the Central India Agency.

Mr. H. E. M. James, CS, will rejoin his permanent appointment of Deputy Director-General of the Post Office on Jan. 31, Mr. P. Sheridan, who has officiated for the past four years, reverting to his substantive post as Inspector-General of the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. R. G. Thompson, Secretary to the Financial Commissioner of the Punjab, is to be the next Postmaster-General of that province.

MR. W. R. LAWRENCE, of the Revenue Department, goes home shortly on three months' leave, and Mr. W. C. Macpherson, Under-Secretary in the General and Revenue Departments, Bengal, will officiate for him.

Mr. F. W. Rees, District and Sessions Judge at Tipperah, resigns the Civil Service from Decomber 31st.

THE REV. A. H. ETTY has been appointed chaplain at MAJOR COOPER, Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy, is likely to be compelled by ill-health to resign his appointment. No one, it is said, could discharge the duties of the post with more tact and energy than he has done; nor will it be forgotten that the success of the Countess of Dufferin's movement for medical aid to women in India owes a great deal to the hard work Major Cooper put in as Secretary to the Central Fund Committee.

THE Amir left Kabul a fortnight ago for Jellalabad, where he has probably arrived by this time. It is now definitely settled that Captain Griesbach goes to Kabul to institute geological explorations for the Amir. He will start very shortly.

THE Nizam has been suffering from fever for several days past, but is now convalescent.

A TELEGRAM has been received in India from the Gaekwar of Baroda, intimating that his Highness returns to this country immediately.

THE Maharaja of Jhind was to be installed on the 2nd of February. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab was represented on the occasion by Colonel L. J. H. Grey, C.S.I., Commissioner and Superintendent of the Delhi Division.

THE latest addition to the G.C.S.I. is the Zil-es-Sultan, Governor of the Persian province of Fars.

THE Khan of Khelat has left Dadur, and moved on to Mittri.

THE Convocation of the University of Bombay for conferring degrees was held on January 17th; that of the Calcutta University on January 14th.

At the Convocation of the Calcutta University on January 14th two young ladies received the degree of B.A., and the warm congratulations of his Excellency the Viceroy. They were both trained at the Bethune Female School, Calcutta.

The Special Committee on the Calcutta Municipal Bill, on reconsidering the matter, have inserted in the Bill the clause in the old Act exempting machinery from municipal taxation.

Mr. F. C. DAUKES, after the report of the Public Service Commission has been got out, will probably take a short leave in India.

THE Championship, with gold medal, of the Western India Rifle Association has been won by Captain Lamb, of the 2nd Cheshire, with a score of 548; the silver medal by Lieut. Strachan, 2nd Wiltshire; and the bronze by Mr. Dorabjee Padamjee, the excellent secretary of the Association.

THE Sumbhu railway-station, on the N.W. Railway, has been burnt down. All the stationary and stores were completely destroyed. The cause of the fire is unknown.

It is understood that a trial is to be made of a system whereby convict labour may be utilised in the making up of military clothing.

THE Bengal Irrigation Commission have resumed work, and have visited Dehri, Rhotas, and Daodnagar, collecting information and taking evidence.

PRINCE SUBAYE JAH, a scion of the Delhi Royal family, who has been sojourning in Hyderabad for the past two years, has at last succeeded in obtaining from that Government a mansab of Rs. 400 a month.

Affairs in Nepaul are now fairly quiet. It is said that Runbir Jung has returned to India, and is living quietly with his friends. THE Weekly Burma Summary reports a raid by Kachins in the Myadaung district.

MANDALAY town and and district is quiet, but dacoity is qurevalent is in Kyouksay and Sagaing.

AT Myinmana an important capture of two leaders and thirty dacoits was made.

THE Shan and Yaw Columns are making satisfactory progress.

THE suit against Mr. T. H. Larpent, late Registrar of the Punjab University, has been dismissed.

PRINCE HENRY of Orleans is now at Lahore.

THREE is no further news of importance from Sikkim. A report that the Raja has returned from Thibetan territory is not yet confirmed. It is certain, however, that Tumlung is crowded with roughs from the frontier, and that the people are in a state of alarm.

BANGALORE Fort will probably be given over to the Maharaja of Mysore in exchange for the British Residency, which is the property of his Highness.

DACOITS from Gwalior have again raided into British territory near Jhansi. Some ten persons, including six women and a child, were maltreated, some of them having been murdered. The Central India Agency will organise another campaign against these ruffians, who are evidently forgetting the lesson taught them two years age.

A FATAL accident has happened at the Ballygunge Steeplechases. In the Suburban Cup the jockey Ryan, who was riding a horse called Black Angel, was thrown and killed, the animal coming down with him.

OBITUARY. - Major Trafford, Northumberland Fusiliers.

NOTES.

THE chief news from India by telegram to-day refers to the discussion in the Council Chamber, Calcutta, on the Indian Budget. There has been a general feeling of relief that there has been no augmentation of the Income-tax, and so the means of meeting the deficit by augmentation of the Salt-tax and the imposition of a duty on petroleum have met with universal approval.

We have in our leader to-day touched upon this matter, and shall return to it again, especially with reference to the reductions which Mr. Evans, as will be seen from the Times telegram which we reprint, proposes. Mr. Evans modestly declares that he is not skilled in financial questions, but he nevertheless has offered some very startling suggestions in the way of immediate retrenchment and future economy.

HE would abolish the separate Presidency Governorships and chief commands—a recommendation which has been made frequently before, and which has occasioned considerable discussion in the past, and will no doubt do so again. But, according to the telegram quoted, he objects to the separate armies of the Presidencies, which is not quite easy to understand. He possibly would have the Bombay and Madras Armies, especially the latter, placed on a more economical and efficient footing, but this is what military men who have experience of the Native troops have been recommending for a long time.

THE news by Overland Mail is of a quiet and unevent-ful nature, and matters in India must (except financially) be highly satisfactory to allow the Viceroy and Lady Dufferin to take trip to Cashmere in the spring, as it is reported they intend to do,

It is melancholy to think that sanitary science has not yet succeeded in stamping out cholera from the supposed healthy military stations of India. It possibly will always be endemic in large cities like Calcutta in spite of improved drainage and waterworks, but it ought not to be allowed to get a hold on such a station, for instance, as Poona. Yet the cantonments there have been visited by a peculiarly virulent type of this dreaded disease—amongst the Natives seventy per cent. of those attacked have succumbed—and the situation has been considered so serious that the military authorities have abandoned the idea of holding a Camp of Exercise, as at one time intended.

The telegram from Calcutta says that a British infantry regiment is held in readiness to move to the front at a few hours' notice in case the progress of the Pioneer regiment into Sikkim is obstructed, or affairs among the Tibetans become graver. The Pioneers, who have arrived at Siliguri, will advance through the Teesta Valley. The attitude of the Tibetans in connection with the Sikkim difficulty is of a kind to precipitate a sharp solution of the question involved. A Darjeeling correspondent informs the Pioneer that the Tibetans who have accompanied the Rajah of Sikkim back to his territory are conducting themselves as if Sikkim were already part and parcel of Tibet, and talking loudly of invading India itself if the British Government dares interfere with them. Foolish talk and ridiculous threat, no doubt, but the patriotic party in Sikkim are cowed by such bluster.

THE issue of a special ribbon for the Burman campaign will, of course, make a difference to a large number of officers who were engaged in the late operations, and who are already in receipt of the frontier war medal, which will under the altered conditions be awarded to them again. Among the officers thus affected are Sir Frederick Roberts, Sir George White, Sir R. C. Low, Sir William Lockhart, and Sir Francis Norman, who would in the ordinary course have merely received the clasp as an addition to the medal they already wore. The decision, says a contemporary, is a very just one, and will remove a deep-spread feeling of discontent among the officers and men of the Indian army. One Queen's regiment is notably affected by the decision, as many officers and men of the 51st King's Own Light Infantry already wear the frontier war medal for services in the Jowaki campaign of ten years ago.

The Government of India has placed the Star Navigation Company, Limited, on the same footing as the Peninsular and Oriental and British India Steam Navigation Companies in respect to officers' passages. In accordance with this decision officers in future travelling by the Star Line steamers will be exempted from the penalty attached to their exceeding their furlough on leave out of India by reason of delay in the arrival of the vessel in which they return, provided it was timed to arrive in India before its expiration.

The Pioneer says:—"Mr. Charles Marvin dies hard. In the controversy he has had with Sir West Ridgeway as to the nature of the country between the Kushk and Murghab rivers, awarded to Russia under the final Afghan frontier arrangements, he has shifted his ground from time to time with great cleverness, regardless of the constant contradictions which have been given to every statement he has advanced. We know, at last, what he holds Russia has gained: it is a "second place-of-arms in immediate proximity of Herat in advance of the larger place-of-arms of Merv." Russia, by boring for and storage of water, is to make the country, which now yields only scanty pasturage, equal to supporting a "sufficient force to carry the Herat district by a single rush." And all this is the outcome of having let Russia advance her frontier posts ten or eleven miles nearer Herat! Mr. Marvin refuses to believe in the measurements, reports, or facts generally of the English officers who saw and examined the country; he will wait until the Russians put forth their maps and reports, and then—he will triumph. We are inclined to think that on some occasions he has a bee in his bonnet, and that the present is one of them. Mr. Marvin is an excellent translator, and has done good work in keeping the Central Asian question before the English public; but his opinion regarding Herat and its approaches cannot in any way be accepted as that of an expert. Let him stick to his translations, and he will do well."

SEVERAL Indian as well as English papers have announced that the Duc d'Orleans (who, should the Legitimists regain power in France, would be presumptive heir to the throne) has been given a commission in the 60th Royal Rifle Regiment. This is not the case, as being a foreigner he is ineligible to hold a commission in the British army. But, having passed through the Royal Military College at Sandhurst, he has been permitted to attach himself to the Rifles, but without holding any definite position in the regiment or the army.

A MILITARY contemporary points out that although the Indian Army Reserve will prove a great boon to the Sowars and Sepoys it will suffice only to fill up the present regiments in time of war not to raise others. There are hundreds of Sepoys who leave the army every year from no dislike of the service, but simply because they are urgently required at their homes. Such men would be glad to receive a small monthly allowance as a retainingtee in the event of their being required for service. The two classes of the Reserve, active and Garrison, comprise all men who leave the service otherwise than on pension. Those who go with less than twelve years' service are liable to be called out for active service anywhere, in case of necessity, joining either their old regiment or one of its linked battalions. The Garrison Reserve, on the other hand, consists of men of over twelve years' service, and they can be called out only for service in India.

Even if the Garrison Reserve were sufficiently large of itself to do the whole of the garrison work, it could not be formed into independent battalions. The officers and men would not know each other as well as is the case in a regular regiment, and having no British officers, they could only be massed under present rules by joining them to existing battalions.

PONY BACING in India has in certain quarters not been over conducive to the morality of owners who have loose notions about measurement rules. It would appear, however, from the following that the ponies themselves are in a fair way of being demoralised from hydrate of chloral. "A Steward" writes to an Indian paper:—"I see letters in your paper about the necessity and the advantage of measuring ponies a few days before each race meeting. I myself was once of the same opinion, but now that many owners have found out that a good strong gallop, pro-longed a little beyond the ordinary daily gallop, followed by 11 drachms of hydrate of chloral, acts as effectually in reducing a pony's height as any former cruel treatment, the advantage of the constant measuring is done away. The chloral soothes the horse, sends him into a quiet sleep after his return from measurement, and the pony is as fit to gallop the same evening or next morning as ever The solution of the difficulty is still to be found out, and is a difficult one—viz., how to prevent clever unscrupulous men obtaining an advantage. This a truly unscrupulous men obtaining an advantage. a difficult problem."

THE sudden death of Sir Henry Maine will cast a gloom not only amongst his official colleagues, but amongst Anglo-Indians generally, besides being, as the Times says, a loss to English letters and to English public life. No one will question the truth of what that journal in its obituary notice this morning, that, "Take him for all in all, he had few equals among those who have formed the Council of the Secretary of State for India. In Sir Henry Moine the State beautiful of the Secretary of State for India. Maine the State has lost one of its most valuable servants, and the world of letters one of its most brilliant luminaries."

WE are obliged, from want of space to-day, to hold over several communications, correspondence, and reviews.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 5.

The financial debate commenced in the week before last was continued in the Legislative Council on Friday, when Mr. Westland proposed that the Bill for levying a customs duty on petroleum should be referred to a select committee. It was, he said, desirable to consider some questions of detail, such as the definition of petroleum, and whether the duty should be an ad valorem one, or one of so much per gallon.

An interesting discussion followed, and the members showed remarkable unanimity in supporting the Government's proposals. Sir Manekjee Petit, the Bombay native member, said that he calculated the duty would increase the price of kerosine by only 1 pie per quart, and, therefore, would not be felt even by the poorest. CALCUTTA, FEB. 5.

sine by only 1 pie per quart, and, therefore, would not be lest even by the poorest.

The Hon. Mr. Steel, the mercantile member, had no objection to the principle of taxing petroleum, but would have preferred to fix the duty at 1 anna per gallon, which would produce a revenue of 20 lakhs, without materially affecting the consumer or impeding trade. He went on to say, with reference to the recent increase in the salt duty, that the reservations in the sea customs list which exempted shipments already cleared for India from the enhanced duty had certainly benefited individuals at the cost of the public revenue, and he would gladly support any measure repealing those reservations.

He expressed surprise and regret at seeing the Government blamed for enhancing the salt duty by Executive order; and, speaking on behalf of the mercantile community, he did not hesitate to say that any other course would have caused great loss to the country. Complaints had been made that the owners of bonded salt would lose heavily, but his inquiries satisfied him that they would really be large gainers, as they owned much larger quantities of salt in transit from England, which would profit by the increased prices without paying the increased duty.

which would pront by the increased prices without paying the increased duty.

Mr. Steel next proceeded to offer some general remarks on the financial situation. He considered that the Finance Minister's defence against the charge of extravagant administration was complete, and that the Government was far more open to the charge of penurious reluctance to increase the expenditure. He approved the methods taken to restore the financial equilibrium. An income-tax was correct in theory, but the experience of the last two years had greatly increased his objections to it on practical grounds. But he felt every confidence that the increase of the salt and petroleum duties would cause no hardship. He thought that the cotton duties had been rashly remitted, but saw no use in discussing the question of their reimposition, as it was outside the range of practical politics. In conclusion, he held that there was every reason for looking forward to the future with hope. Agriculture was flourishing, manufactures were prosperous, trade was growing, and the day might not be far distant when the Viceroy would have the pleasant task of remitting taxation. He trusted that when that day came the court fees would be reduced and the rice duty remitted. The income-tax should be the next to go, and then the people would not complain if be the next to go, and then the people would not complain if the salt duty were again lowered.

The Hon. Mr. Evans, who followed, said that he was not an expert in financial matters, but he was strongly impressed with the conviction that indirect taxation must be the mainstay of India, and that further attempts at direct taxation would cause waste and friction disproportionate to the monetary result. Considering that a reimposition of the cotton duties had become impossible, he saw no better means of raising money to meet present exigencies than those proposed by the Government. The outlook, however, was not cheerful, and he thought the time had come when the home authorities should seriously the time had come when the nome authorities should seriously take in hand the reforms which the Indian Government was powerless to effect, such as the revision of the home charges and of the expenditure thrown on India by the short-service system, by the cost of transport, and so on, as well as the question of abolishing the costly plan of separate presidencies, with separate governors, commanders-in-chief, and armies.

Two Native members, Syed Ameer Hossein and Sir Shankar Sing groke next. Both supported the petroleum duty. Raigh

Sing, spoke next. Both supported the petroleum duty. Rajah Peary Mohun Mookerjee, representing the Bengal zemindars, said that all objection to the tax vanished when they considered its average incidence on every family—less than one half anna yearly.

Congress Chesney wished to decrea to the charge of real-less.

General Chesney wished to demur to the charge of recklessness in reducing the salt duties brought against the Government of 1882. He thought the step a proper one in the then existing circumstances. Nor did he share the gloomy apprehensions with which some people regarded the present prospects. He remembered several financial crises, through all of which the country had passed safely, and he had little doubt that it would pass through this one with equal safety. Mr. Westland, in replying, dwelt at some length on the suggestions which had been thrown out as to meeting the Burma charges by a special loan. He thought such a course would involve a financial separation between the various provinces, which would be a practical impossibility, and that any such plan was impracticable.

The Viceroy, in closing the debate, expressed his gratification at finding that the Government's measures possessed the unanimous approval of the Council. The real difficulty was, he, said, the instability of silver, and although that must continue to be a source of anxiety, he was glad to say that the news from be a source of anxiety, he was glad to say that the news from Burma and the Shan States was very good, that the country was being rapidly pacified, and that China was doing every-thing to cultivate friendly relations along the Burmese frontier, as well as to bring about a settlement of the Sikkim difficulty.

The Petroleum Bill was then referred to a select committee for further consideration.

The public and the Press are not showing quite so much unanimity on the financial proposals. The petroleum duty meets with general approval, but there is considerable difference of opinion regarding the salt duty; and, having regard to the weight of authority on each side, it is difficult to arrive at a conclusion as to how far, if at all, the enhanced duty will be felt by the poorer classes.

A Chapter of the Order of the Indian Empire was held at Government House yesterday. Lord Connemara, who is now visiting the Viceroy, was invested with the riband and star of a Knight Grand Commander, and several others with the insignia of inferior degrees of the Order. A large number of people attended, and the ceremony was very picturesque.

The winter rains, which are this year nearly a month late, have at last fallen copiously over the whole of northern India, and have done much good. Prices, which were rapidly rising towards the scarcity level, have already fallen, and crop prospects are now promising.

NEPAUL.

Bere Shumshire, Prime Minister of Nepaul, arrived in Calcutta last week on a visit to the Viceroy. Nepaulese affairs appear to be attracting considerable attention from the Indian Press, although it is difficult to say why this should be, as the recent revolution was after all only an ordinary incident in Nepaul politics. Several sensational stories are going the round of the newspapers, nearly all being unfounded. Among others is one that an attempt was made to murder the British others is one that an attempt was made to murder the British Resident. This takes its rise from the fact that some two years ago, while the Resident was travelling in an out-of-the-way district, a shot was fired near him, though it was doubtful whether it was aimed at him. At any rate, he thought the matter one of so little importance as not to be worth a report to the Indian Government.

SIKKIM.

The Tibetan garrison which occupied Lingtu, in Sikkim, has not yet been withdrawn, although China, acting on the representations of the Indian Government, has sent orders on the subject to Lhassa.

The Rajah of Sikkim has applied for the restoration of the stipend formerly paid to him by the Indian Government, and which was stopped when, in defiance of treaty obligations, he which was stopped when, in defiance of treaty obligations, he absented himself from his dominions for nearly two years. The position now is that a foreign Power has entered a British feudatory State and placed a garrison on a road constructed and kept in order by the British Government. A regiment of pioneers has been ordered up to repair the road, and if the Tibetan force be not withdrawn by the middle of March probably that regiment will be supported by a European detachment with two or three guns. The British force will then be ordered to expel the intruders. This will be an easy operation and whatever he thought as to our recent policy regarding be ordered to expel the intruders. This will be an easy operation, and whatever be thought as to our recent policy regarding Tibet, it can hardly be denied that the Indian Government is strictly within its rights in refusing to allow any interference with Sikkim.

BURMA.

RANGOON, FEB. 4.

The news from Upper Burma published in the last official bulletin is unimportant. Mandalay town and district are reported to be quiet. Dacoity is prevalent in the Shwebo, Yemethen, and Kyoukse districts. One of the dacoits who took part in the murder of Mr. Gleeson in October, 1886, has been captured in Pagan. Yakut, a well-known dacoit Boh, has also been captured. A large gathering of dacoits at Salkyadoung, in the Myingyan district, was attacked and routed by troops sent from Myingyan and Mahline, ten dacoits being killed and many wounded.

It has been announced from General Low's brigade that the Pouk column, under Colonel Gatacre, marching from Gungow, and accompanied by the general, had established communication with the Kalewn and Myafg columns. The troops under tion with the Kalewn and Myafg columns. The troops under General Low's command have opened up a number of new roads in the district which they occupy, and the country has been carefully surveyed. Few dacoit leaders of any note now remain at large in this district. The dacoit leaders are now hiding in Pagyi hills, where the dense jungle baffiles all pursuits. A dacoit chief named Ngagee is still troublesome in Pakoka. General Low's force will shortly be brken up. The troops c ontinue in excelent health.

Ottama, formerly chief lieutenant of Bohsway, and the most dangerous of the dacoit leaders, is still at large. He has been unceasingly pursued by cavalry, and on several occasions has narrowly escaped capture. If this formidable chief succeed in escaping, fresh disturbances may be looked for during the next rainy season in the Minbu district, which was so long ravaged by Bohsway. However, the roads which have been constructed and the numerous military posts which have been established in the Minbu district will probably enable the military and civil authorities to materially curb Ottama's depredations.

Satisfactory intelligence has arrived from the northern Shan column, which reached Zosher unopposed on January 22nd. The Tsawbwa of Thinnimyo sent his principal officials with friendly letters. The Tsawbwa offers to meet the column at Thinnimyo. Sharp opposition had been anticipated in that quarter. The northern column will eventually march to Conlon erry, on the Salwen river.

Work on the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway is progressing satisfactorily, under the direction of Mr. Buyers, engineer-inchief of the Burma State Railway. Although no serious physical obstacles had to be overcome, the railway staff had physical obstacles had to be overcome, the railway staff had to encounter considerable difficulties, owing to the disturbed state of the country, in procuring labour. The length of the line is 220 miles. The southern half runs through dense forests, while the northern half traverses a generally well-populated country. Throughout its whole course the line runs parallel to and within a few miles of the Shan hills, and passes several streams from 300ft. to 500ft. broad. In the rainy season the only important river is the Mythrei ten miles. rainy season the only important river is the Myitngi, ten miles to the south of Mandalay, which is crossed by a bridge with four spans of 150ft. each, and two of 40ft. On the southern end the rails are laid for 70 miles to the north of Tounghoo, and on the northern end to a point about 40 miles south of Mandalay. Plate-laying is progressing at the rate of a mile and a half per day, and if no hitch occurs it will be possible by the end of April to run trains from Tounghoo to Mandalay. As much of the track, especially in the central portion of the line, has not been consolidated by rain, it would be difficult to keep it at present in safe order for regular traffic. The whole line will not, therefore, be opened for traffic until Jan. 1, 1889; but a section of 59 miles, from Tounghoo to Pyinmana, will be open for regular traffic on April 1 next.

Colonel Strover, who was announced as Commissioner of Mandalay, will probably act in another district.

MILITARY LONG SERVICE IN INDIA. (Times of India.)

The two articles of the series that have been published deal with the weak points in our military system, the proposed remedies being reserved for future discussion. Sir Charles Dilke, in the December number of the Fortnightly Review, drops the hint the basis of his charmed a long sorriging. will be to have a short service army for home and a long service army for India, the two military systems to be kept entirely distinct. This plan is supported by Sir Frederick Roberts, who advocates three years' service for the home and twelve years' service for the Indian army. India would thus have its local long service army, and England its short service system acting as a reserve-manufacturing machine. Sir Charles Dilke is convinced that there would be no lack of recruits for a well paid long service Indian or Colonial army, while, with the existing system of reliefs, it would be a financial gain to India even if the rates of pay were largely increased. He further points out that, as proved by the long-service corps of the Royal Marines, there is an abundance of men who like a life adventure, and who for one reason or another wish to leave their country and to start a new career abroad. Long service will be to have a short service army for home and a long service their country and to start a new career abroad. Long service recruitings and short service recruiting need thus have no conflicting interests; two distinct classes of men would volunteer for the two services. Sir Charles Dilke would make Gibraltar, Malta, Halifax, and other places easy of access from England home stations, while he would hand over to the Indian army Singapore, Hong Kong, and other distant garrisons. There is little doubt that whenever our military system comes to be seriously taken in hand for purposes of reorganisation some scheme on the lines thus laid down by Sir Charles Dilke will be adopted. Army service in India and army service in England are so completely different that to recruit them by identically the same means is palpably absurd.

NATIVE OFFICERS. (Bombay Gazette.)

We recently touched on the question of how to raise the standard of Native officers throughout the Indian Army, and gave a brief sketch of the rise and progress of the Subedar, from the time when Clive first took him in hand to the present day. The Duke of Connaught has interested himself warmly in the matter in this Presidency, and has already done a good deal to secure the best men for Native officers. In addition to insisting on younger men being promoted to Jemedar, and making a musketry qualification a sine qua non, the Commander-in-Chief has completely altered the dress of the Native officers, that is to say, instead of being dressed in kharkee uniform exactly like the men as heretofore, they are to be dressed like the British officers, with the exception, of course, that they will not wear the helmet or glengarry. But while this alteration in the clothing of Native officers is a step in the right direction there are many other ways in which his position might be improved, and that without making any great change in things as they are. For instance, at present he is a mere cipher in nearly every regiment in the service. When a man in his company is to be promoted, nobody ever thinks of consulting him. If one asks why, the answer most likely is that if he were asked to recommend anyone for promotion, he would be sure to recommend, if not a relation, at any rate a man of his own caste. In other words, he cannot be trusted. Then, again, at this time of the year, when unfortunate Wing Commanders spend the greater part of the day on the rifle range at musketry, their Native officers are not allowed to help them by putting a company through themselves. And why? Because the musketry regulations lay down that each company must be put through its annual course by a British officer. It is the same story. The Native officer is not to be trusted. So in paying the men. The Wing Commander must pay his men himself, and sign that he has done so. The Subedar of the company has nothing to do with it. From these little thin

MAHOMEDANS AND THE CONGRESS. (Muslim Herald.)

No one would venture to deny that the interest of the Indian Muslims and Hindus are more hopelessly divergent than those of the Orangemen and the Ribbonmen of Ireland. From a religious or social point of view the Musalman differs much more from the Hindu than the Irish [Catholic from the Irish Protestant; and if the Ulsterman oppose Home Rule for Ireland because they, being comparatively a hand's-grasp, entertain grave doubts as to their interests being safeguarded, the Mahomedans, whose position is not dissimilar, should be even more cautious than the Irish minority in lending their countenance to a Congress whose ultimate aim is representative government for India. Composed as the body of agitators is mostly of members of classes who, whatever their intellectual capacity may be, scarcely possess warlike qualities, and who never at any time contributed to that element of "force" which for several centuries shaped the destinies of this country, confining themselves to the peaceful avocations of letters and commerce, it nowseeks to supply that material deficiency by canvassing for the support of the Sons of Islam who chiefly represent the striking power of the country, and thus strengthened hector the Government into complying with demands, however extreme. Such a conception may not be now very distinctly defined in the minds of the present generation, but their successors, flushed with success and surcharged with even more advanced "aspirations," would be more or less than human did they not seek, from their Muslim allies, all the strength they require for inserting the keys into the locks of "the magazines of physical force." Notwithstanding the profuse asseverations of loyalty that fall from the lips of the agitators, we feel bound to warn our co-religionists against the present movement, which, on the showing of its originator contains latent germs of sedition, which require only time and opportunity to come to the surface and bear evil fruit.

THE BENGAL U. C. S. (Englishman).

Whatever the Unconvenanted Civil Service in the Panjab may think or fear, that of Bengal is evidently convinced that it has a perfect right to ventilate its grievances and to do all in its power to bring public opinion to bear upon the authorities both in India and England. A meeting was held lately at Kattak, at which the Service in Orissa was fairly represented, and the resolutions passed on the occasion were frank and outspoken. The men of Orissa determined to act in concert with Mr. H. S. King's Committee, and to raise funds to aid that body. They would impress on the representative Committee as strongly as possible that they were not complaining of their salaries while in India, but about the leave and pension allowances while out of India. Mr. S. C. Roberts, of Kattack, is appointed locally to receive subscriptions. The plan of campaign is simple, and it may be commended to the attention of the Service in other parts of the province.

THE FUTURE OF BOMBAY. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

If the thousand and one recommendations made by the Bombay Extension Committee were to be carried out, we should soon have in India a city which, from an architectural as well as a commercial point of view, would equal, if not surpass, some of the central cities of Europe. It is impossible to contemplate the grandeur of the proposals without a certain feeling of pride that such things should already be possible in a land still subject to all the cramping influences of Oriental civilisation. A century or two ago an Indian city of straight streets and arcaded footpaths would have astonished visitors beyond measure; now the Natives of Bombay are not only able to regard it as a natural ideal, but even to advise in its construction. Everywhere the inconvenient arrangements of former generations are being forsaken or relegated to the destroying hands of time, but it was left for the people of Western India to propose their wholesale abolition and the subsequent erection in their place of the more comfortable residences of an English town. To the few enthusiastic admirers of Indian art these attempts to substitute the brick and mortar of the West for the ideal marble and gold of the East will appear the grossest iniquity imaginable; but as gold and marble are not likely to be much in demand in the rearing of cities, they may be summarily dismissed for the present. What the Extension Committee practically hope to do is to make a handsome and solid city of the Western capital. With this object they propose to make many improvements in its construction, with the sanction of Government and the local authorities. One of these is that lands should be reserved in different situations for different classes of buildings, so that no small or mean houses are to be permitted in the fashionable quarters, one of the chief objects of the Committee being to remove unsightly things; otherwise Bombay would be no better than Calcutta or, for that matter, any of our larger Indian towns. It is also suggested that the old streets should be

CLASSES OF EDUCATION. (Times of India.)

It is the duty of Government to foster every class of educal tion, superior, secondary, and primary, because each is the necessary complement of the other. Primary education supplies material for secondary education, which leads to higher education, which develops the minds of the nation. In return higher education supplies the instruments for conducting primary education. The Bombay Government inform the Director of Public Instruction that in the future he must see that "the increased demands of aided institutions are counterbalanced by a reduction of expenditure elsewhere, and he must watch the tendency of certain classes of education to expand more rapidly than others. It is quite natural that secondary education which can command high fees should be the branch of educational activity more eagerly sought after by private enterprise, and the Governor in Council is glad to observe the liberal response made by the department to applications for aid; but this result enhances the responsibility of Government towards primary education." In plain language, this means that as aided institutions increase, Government are anxious to retire from the management of secondary education. But in taking this step Government must be prepared to encounter the hostility of the educated Natives, who consider that secondary and higher education conducted by the State is necessary to the material and political advancement of the land. A great deal is to be said for the argument that it is the duty of Government to bestow its educational grants upon the humbler and more helpless classes, leaving the middle classes to defray their own charges for instruction. But it must always be been in mind that this is not the view held by the Natives themselves, who consider that the grants for high education should not be diminished. It is a wise Government which does not unduly espouse the cause either disputants. The resolution of Government is a little too partisan in its tone. The Bombay Government seems not ouly to hold strong views on the subject, but evidently wishes to impose them on Native States. The Government have made the discovery that in Native States a considerable part of the expenditure is devoted to secondary education and that the fees were only nine per cent. of the cost of education. On this they remarked, "Such liberality may be necessary at the outset, but it will be for the rulers of Native States to consider whether it serves to promote education in the end; and they will perhaps not lose sight of the fact that private enterprise is very backward in assisting them to supply the wants of the people in education." The advice seems somewhat uncalled for, and may do mischief in checking a Native ruler's ardour for the promotion of education. A Native prince may spend his money in worse ways than the advancement of any branch of education.

THE POSITION IN NEPAL. (Pioneer.)

It is a curious circumstance that though the Maharajah of Nepal is generally regarded as a mere figure-head of the Government, which is usually conducted by the Prime Minister for the time being, any order issued under his seal is loyally obeyed by subordinate officers. It was to this circumstance that Ranbir Jung owed his first success after recently crossing the Nepal frontier. He had only some 80 or 100 unarmed men with him, but the purwana which he showed at the first post secured him from molestation, and being joined by some armed adherents he managed to seize the guard-house and secure rifles and ammunition. It is not at present easy to follow the intrigue which has undoubtedly been set on foot to dispossess the sons of Dershamshere of the power which they have held since the last revolution; but the absence of Dershamshere himself now in Calcutta on a visit would seem to have been the signal for the expedition. It is undoubtedly a dangerous one in many ways, for Nepalese Ministers have a short way of dealing with any enemy who falls into their hands; but Ranbir knows the temper of his countrymen, and has gone into the adventure open-eyed. His chances of success are, we are inclined to think, almost entirely dependent upon the attitude of the army. He has always been a great favourite with the soldiers, who remember the past glories of his father, Jung Bahadur, and if he gains Khatmandu with one or two revolted regiments at his back his prestige should alone suffice to win for him the bulk of the troops in garrison to his side. These crevolutions fortunately do not immediately concern the Indian Government, which in principle never interferes in Nepal affairs, but recognises the de facto Minister whoever he may be. In the meantime the fact of the Resident being on the march makes intelligence more difficult for the Government to obtain. Mr. Girdlestone cannot yet be far across the frontier.

THE INDIAN FLEET. (Pioneer.)

Now that the defences of the Indian Empire are coming seriously and systematically under consideration, it seems time to say a word for the urgently required reconstitution of the fleet intended to defend our waters. The present East Indian Squadron can only rank nominally among these defences, and it is perhaps unfortunate that it should do so at all; for one of the excuses given for the indifferent defence of our ports is the fact that the fleet would be ready to help. There are many combinations possible on the political chessboard by which India would come in danger of being attacked by sea, and attacked in force, too; and it is unstatesmanlike to ignore the possibilities because they happen to be improbable at the present moment. We are too apt to forget that India has come to the front of recent years in more ways than one, and is, to a certain extent, a Power recognised by Europe, and it would be extremely likely that an enemy, guessing rightly how a successful siege would damage our reputation, even if the city were retaken in a week, might make a dash at one of our big exposed ports, like Bombay or Karachi, and risk a great deal on the chance of a surprise. Without a fleet, or a system of coast defence vessels and floating batteries that would be costlier than a fleet, it would be hopeless to look for safety, and we should learn too late the meaning of false economy. And even if no line of battle-ships were sent, could we hope to escape as we now are? Supposing a squadron of armoured cruisers of the modern type suddenly appeared off one of our ports such as, for instance, Bombay. The Reina Regents, the inew Spanish cruiser, is armed with four 9 6-inch breech-loading guns, and six 5-inch guns; supposing half-a-dozen vessels of that strength (no wonderful feat) attacked Bombay, how could they be beaten off? The turret-ships are not yet armed with their new guns, and if they were, a couple of these armed cruisers would very soon polish them off, for their armour is better than that of the turret ships. As for the shore defences where would the old 35-ton muzzle-loaders be? And the Bacchante, alas for the 7-inch muzzle-loaders, they would pop no more, and the first attempt of the squadron to beat off the cruisers must result in defeat. No doubt British pluck and seamanship would do all that could be done even under those dismal conditions, but no amount of pluck will enable muzzle-loaders in an unarmoured vessel to beat heavy breech-loaders in an armoured one. The proper squadron for India would contain one ship like the Devastation, which, though fourteen years old, would fight well if she had breech-loaders, two coast defence vessels like the Glatton and Gorgon to defend the harbours, three or four armed cruisers of the Aurora type, and whatever unarmoured vessels were considered necessary; all being armed with breech-loaders. Such a fleet and no less is what India ought to have, and, without it, she is not safe.

BENGAI.

THE receipts from ten sales of Bengal opium and nine months' pass duty at Bombay amount to Rs. 6,85,19,050, which is Rs. 23,81,050 less than the estimate. Of this deficiency Bengal shows Rs. 18,88,375, and Bombay Rs. 4,92,675.

THE Calcutta High Court have already fixed their vacation for next autumn. It will be from the 10th of September to the 17th of November. There will be some changes in the Court during the year, as Mr. Prinsep takes furlough at the end of March, while another civilian judge contemplates retiring altogether.

THE Khyber Maliks, whom Colonel Warburton is "personally conducting" at Calcutta, had their eyes opened at an early stage to the extent and resources of India. They imagined that the railway came to an end at Attock; so their amazement may be pictured when they found themselves carried on day and night for another eighty hears or so until Howrah was reached. They might well be taken hereafter to Bombay, thence by sea to Karachi, and railed finally to Lahore via the Indus Valley line. They would them have seen for themselves whot a vast country India is, and how widespread is our power. It is desirable above all things to produce strong moral effects on the warlike tribes across our inentier, and this is an easy way of doing it.

An appeal case came before the High Court in Calcutta early this week, in which the appellant was Mr. Rdward Arthur Sims, manager of the Burriapore Indigo Factory, who, on Nov. 15 last, was convicted by the officiating Juint Magistrate of Mozufferpore of criminal trespass in six different cases, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200 in each case. The complainants were ryots of a factory of which Mr. Sims was manager. His defence in the case was that these ryots, with several others, had relinquished the holdings in Bysakh, in consequence of which he had cultivated indigo on these holdings, and again in October last went to plough the land and set it ready for cultivation. On this occasion the ryots objected, and subsequently complained of the ploughing up of the land. The Magistrate held that Mr. Sims used no criminal force, and that the complainants offered no opposition or objection to Mr. Sims going on ploughing; but he having gone with a hundred men and ploughs must have done so for the purpose of intimidation and annovance. The Counsel for Mr. Sims pleaded that he actual in good faith. The High Court reserved judgment.

A Gazette of India "Extraordinary" notifies that from January 19th the duty to be paid on salt shall be one rupee per maund in Lower Burma and Rs. 2-8 in British India, excepting the Trans-Indus districts of the Punjab. The increase by this eight annas will probably give some twenty lakhs in India during the next two-and-a-half months, while raising the tax from three annas to one rupee in Burma will yield two lakhs or more. The increase in the course of the next financial year should be something like one crore and fifty lakhs in India, and twelve-and a-half lakhs in Burma.

À FULL meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council assembled on January 19th. Mr. Westland, in presenting the report of the Select Committee on the Indian Stamp Act of 1879, said that after the publication of the Bill they had received a considerable number of criticisms and suggestions from representatives of insurance companies and other authorities. Substantially no objection has been taken to the purpose of the Bill. But it was still evident that it was desirable to modify the language of the Bill to make its scope and intention more definite. He explained that absolutely no modification was made in the law relating to any other subject than fire insurances. The modification made was a reduction of the duty. Whereas under the law as it now stood a duty of six annas on rupees one thousand was taken on any policy of whatever duration, they now took less than six annas of the policy for a period not longer than six months. If a short term policy was renewed they levied a duty upon the renewal until the total of six annas was made up, and then the taxation under the existing law ceased. A slight difficulty as to the manner in which the duty on renewals was to be taken was met by wording the definition so that the duty levied in respect to the renewal need not be deducted upon the original policy, but might be deducted upon the receipt given by the insurer for the renewal premium. One or two companies made suggestions for the reduction of duty generally in this country. We pay higher duty upon fire insurance than was levied in England, but the present financial position is not such as to warrant these proposing any further relief beyond the reduction to something like proportionate rate of duty upon short term policies; and the Bill had therefore been restricted to its original purpose. The Council then adjourned to the 27th January.

MADRAS.

THE National Congress Delegates were received with great éclat at a large public meeting at the instance of the local Sarwajanik Sabha. A resolution was passed thanking the Madras Reception Committee for their attention to the delegates. Great enthusiasm prevailed.

The Bangalore Spectator learns from a reliable source that the Bangalore Fort, which according to the conditions of the rendition treaty remained the property of the British Government, is to be exchanged for the British Residency, the property of the Maharajah of Mysore. The Fort is isolated from the British Station by the surrounding Maharajah's territory. The Residency cost the Mysore Government some seven lakhs, besides the furniture, worth a couple of lakhs. The exchange will take place from the commencement of the official year.

It has been decided by his Highness the Nizam's Government that, under the articles of agreement between it and the Hyderabad Mining Company, no washing for diamonds or other precious stones is on any account to take place without an officer deputed by Government being present. As Mr. Lowinski, the company's mining engineer, purposes to have a series of washings on the diamond fields at an early date, Mr. Syed Ali Belgrami, the Government Director-General of Mines, has been directed to start at once for Partyel, to be present at every washing that is about to take place, and to report the result of each successful operation immediately in the minutest detail to the Government.

In June, 1883, the Government of India, in reply to an application from the agent of the Madras Railway to send home to his Board of Directors for compliance an indent of Rs. 8,000 worth of apparatus necessary to conduct experiments in lighting the central station and passenger carriages by electricity, remarked that they were of opinion that any experiments conducted at Madras would be at least but a repetition of experiments made, or being made, on a large scale in England and elsewhere, and that the introduction of the electric light in the Madras Railway might be deferred until some satisfactory system had been adopted on some of the leading lines. More than three years having elapsed and the lighting by electricity of station buildings and passenger trains having proved a success on other railways, it has been decided to adopt the use of electricity on the Madras Railway shortly; and for this purpose a provision of Rs. 15,000 has been made in the Budget for the coming official year.

The annual State Ball at Madras was a great success. Lord and Lady Connemara arrived shortly before ten, and proceeding through the hall to the daïs cordially greeted their numerous guests. The hall was beautifully lighted and tastely decorated, and the arrangements for the comfort of the guests were excellent. The programme comprised twenty dances, exclusive of two supper dances. The ball opened with the State quadrille, in which the Governor danced with Lady Collins, and Sir Arthur Collins with Lady Connemara. The Maharaja of Vizianagram and the Raja of Bobbili were among those present. The supper was excellent. The toast of "The Queen-Empress," proposed by Lord Connemara, was drunk with enthusiastic cheers. After supper dancing was resumed, and terminated at three in the morning. The number of guests was larger than on any previous occasion, and the misconception about the inadvertent use of the term "dignity" in the official notification did not bear the evil fruit predicted

DEATH FROM OVERWORK.

"Mourner" writes to a Calcutta paper about the suicide of. Mr. Fasson, B.C.S.:—

The news of this able officer's death has been received with profound regret in the district where he was so well-known. And it is difficult to acquit the Government of blame in the sad affair. In truth, a valuable officer has been sacrified to the miserly spirit that pervades the Government in its dealings with its servants. Will it be believed that an important district like Backerganj has been without a European Civil Surgeon for upwards of a year? Had there been such an officer in Barrisal he would long ago have discovered the state to which Mr. Fasson had been reduced by overwork and anxiety both as Magistrate and Collector of so difficult a district as Backerganj. Yet is it the fact that the district as district as Backerganj. Yet is it the fact that the district and contracted a malarious fever in the jungles of Chittagong, which he was never able to shake off. Every now and then he was prostrated with this fever, and while labouring under racking headaches he had to perform his onerous duties, and write reports involving great mental exertion. Is it matter of surprise that he broke down under such circumstances? Is it likely this would have occurred had the Government done its duty in keeping a European Civil Surgeon at Barrisal? This narrow spirit of economy, regardless of every other consideration, is the bane of the present Government. Again, Mr. Fasson has no covenanted Joint Magistrate to help him to govern so turbulent a district. He had a Statutory Joint Magistrate for a short time, and here, I would ask, if it requires such difficult examinations to test the ability of Englishmen to govern India, how is it that these Statutory Civilians are able to perform precisely the same duties, and exercise the same powers, and that in such districts as Backerganj? It is not much more than a year since another Civilian of about the same standing—a man whose legal acquirements marked him out for the highest honours—was suddenly struck down by a fever in an adjoining district. There, too, there was no European doctor, and a simple fever was allowed in a few hours to terminate a valuable life. The Native practitioner in attendance on that occasion did not make any attempt to reduce the temperature of the patient. No ice was to be had, and the common means (water, cloths, &c.) were not employed, the result being that the man died before the medical "care-taker" had any idea of the danger he was in. It is no exaggeration to say that many Civilians in these provinces—men of standing and position—are as utterly neglected in the matter of medical care as the veriest boy assistant sent for his sins to do penance in a tea garden in the remotest corner of Assam!

NOR'ARD OF THE DOGGER.*

The experience of most people in regard to the fish which his day by day placed upon their dinner tables is confined to the payment of the weekly bill; but how few, how very few, of the ordinary public have the slightest idea as to the history of a single dish laden with the denizens of the deep! And yet there are no less than 12,000 persons engaged all the year round in supplying the wants in this direction of the country at large. This huge floating population is "housed" in between three and four hundred smacks, which ride out all storms! No weather deters them, no storm signals reach them out in the North Sea "Nor'ard of the Dogger." These toilers on the mighty deep never rest; there are no holidays, no cessation from work; it is a never-ending struggle for daily hread.

And what a life Mr. Mather depicts in his most charming and delightful narrative! Up to recent times this "town" of ships, this crowd of humanities, pursued their ways uncared for, unheeded, and unknown. Indeed, it is almost sickening to read page after page of the blood-curdling miseries which daily befell these adventurous sons of the deep. Amidst such scenes of danger and peril accidents were of almost hourly occurrence. Yet not a single appliance was in the fleet to meet the simplest necessity. Not a solitary individual was competent to take in hand the most ordinary of medical requirements; and when, as was, alas! too frequently the case, some poor wretch with mangled limbs or injured frame, groaned in anguish, all that could be done was to send him on the steamer which daily leaves for London; and then, wracked and in frenzies of pain, the suffering patient had to writhe away twenty, forty, or fifty mortal hours of suffering till surgical aid could be procured. As for the moral welfare of the men, no one ever gave the matter a thought; the Powers of Darkness held undisputed sway amidst a floating population, many of whom had barely even seen a place of worship, or heard a word of warning.

But now, thanks to Mr. Mather's energetic efforts to ameliorate this condition of things, much has been done to set matters right. The "Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen" has a little fleet of smacks, well stored with medicines and surgical appliances; while some of the crew are sufficiently familiar with the elements of medical knowledge to be able to treat ordinary cases successfully, and with comfort to the sufferer. Services are held on board, and every attempt is made to awaken men to some sense of responsibility to their Maker. Last, but not in the least least, comes the noble effort to drive away temptations to drink. How this has been done, what superb triumphs are recorded in this little unpretentious volume, what obvious and manifest blessings have been showered down upon this noble and humanitarian effort to alleviate suffering and promote the moral and spiritual welfare of thousands of England's sons, must be read to be realised. Viewed merely as a record of daring resolution, of kindly sympathy, of superb heroism—in short, of those characteristics which have made England what she is—"Nor'ard of the Dogger" may well be left to hold its own against the most fertile creations of fancy. Truth is in this case, indeed, stranger than fiction. But when it is remembered that it is a story of high and noble enterprise, that it tells of glad tidings alike for body and soul, that it proclaims a glorious effort to achieve a glorious work, it could be hoped that the readers of "Nor'ard of the Dogger" would be reckoned by thousands rather than hundreds, and that not the few but the many will lend a hand to one of the most interesting and encouraging amidst the many "Missions" which shed lustre on old England, and add another page to the scroll of national duty discharged and public responsibility fulfilled.

There is something wonderfully fascinating in the interpretation of prophecy, due in part to the stupendous importance of the subject, and in part to the inherent love of unravelling intricacies and unfolding mysteries. The public—at any rate the thinking portion thereof—will, it may be safely surmised, read with the deepest interest the most masterly analysis of the Scriptural predictions regarding Egypt which the anonymous author has presented to the world. To follow so learned a student of Holy Writ into the paths of discussion is obviously out of the question; all that a reviewer can hope to achieve is to draw attention to a very remarkable work—for whether the reader agree or disagree with the conclusions of the writer, it is not open to question that the arguments are as able as they are difficult—one had well-nigh written incapabl—of refutation.

most each ear commentation and well-night written incapable—of refutation.

By a long series of carefully thought-out deductions the author endeavours to prove that the one Power whose mission is love, peace, good will, is England. She it is who is destined in the fulness of time to withstand the wiles of infidelity, to counteract the schemes of the enemy of mankind, to oppose the confederacy of anti-Christian Powers. He further proceeds to show that her greatest opponents in this glorious undertaking will be France and Russia, but he proclaims the comforting assurance that their ends will be—nay, must be—frustrated, but not before England has passed through a period of the deepest trouble and anguish. She will have to be purified by the fire of tribulation. It is not within our province to pass judgment upon matters which, even after the deepest study and reflection, are, and always must remain, more or less obscure; but it is, at least, remarkable to notice the very singular coincidence of recent events in Egypt, regarded from a prophetical point of view. As the writer aptly says, the occurrences of the last four or five years has been so strange, so unlikely, so utterly opposed to the probable, that the history of England's movements in Egypt reads rather like a romance than a sober chapter of history. Yet what has happened harmonises in a most remarkable manner with predictions of prophecy. Surely, here is subject for reflection! Surely, the thoughtless and giddy might turn aside for a moment to regard the things which "make for their peace." They need not—indeed, we ourselves, do not—agree with all the author pens. There is, for instance, much ignorance, and, perhaps, more folly displayed in regard to the opium question; while illiberality of sentiment is but too predominent in regard to our national vices. Yet, withal, one cannot but admire the studied diligence which has succeeded in extracting a connected sequence of events out of the chaos of prophetic utterances, and has presented to the world a tale

EARLY ADVENTURES IN PERSIA, SAMARIA, AND BABYLONIA.†

Thirty years ago, a sailor on guard at the gangway of the Lord Elphinstone, then at anchor in the neighbourhood of Bushire, seeing what he believed to be a poor, ill-clad Arab, approach the ship, warned the intruder off. Jack Tar was not a little surprised when the soi-disant son of the desert addressed him in English, and explained the object of his visit. Such was Mr. Layard's first appearance before the British public, after a residence of many months amidst the wandering Bakhtigaris of Persia. To say that during this time the intrepid traveller carried his life in his hand conveys but an inadequate notion as to the danger, the toils, the escapes, which were the everyday occurrence of one of the most venturesome sons of England that ever put foot in the stirrup of enterprise. It is difficult to realise that such an attempt as he had successfully accomplished could by any possibility be within the range of "practical politics." Mr. Layard, when he started on his journey, knew but the barest outline of the Persian language. He was not familiar with Oriental ways, and did not possess experience of a nature to avoid the thousand and not pitfalls of ignorance and want of knowledge. How, then, it may be asked, did he manage? Simply by sheer pluck and audacity, and an unusual amount of savoir faire. Nothing deterred him, nothing discouraged him—dangers, difficulties, impossibilities were things of nought to a man who meant what he did and did what he meant.

what he did and did what he meant.

Mr. Layard was essentially a man of action; he loved adventure and despised timidity. No sooner was he out of one perplexity than he darted into another, little less appalling, little less hopeful. Palestine, Persia, Greece, Turkey, Asia Minor, Babylonia, Bulgaria, all afforded scope for enterprise and "pastures new." It is hardly possible to picture in the present Right Hon. Sir A. H. Layard, G.C.B., the plucky unknown voyageur of early years, determined to do or die, and carve for himself a name and reputation. The soberness of years has enshrouded him with a halo of distinction. It has doubtless sobered the rashness of youth; but high, and deservedly so, as Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople stands in the estimation of the public, not a few will prefer to place back the hand of time and accompany—fortunately in spirit rather than estimation of the public, not a few will prefer to place back the hand of time and accompany—fortunately in spirit rather than in body—the embryo diplomatist, as he sat amidst the untutored sons of the desert, listening to their tales of heroism, sharing their dangers—with the addition of not a few extra on his own account as a "faringhi;" curing their ailments, and sympathising with their distresses. This, thauks to the excellent volumes which Mr. Murray has given to the world, is the privilege of all who care to welcome pluck, to admire enthusiasm, and to glory in the triumphs of one who in the battle of life has lent distinction to his country and brought triumph to a people who are proud to own as kinsman an intriump to a people who are proud to own as kinsman an in-trepid traveller, an enthusiastic wanderer, and an honoured statesman.

BENGAL.*

The "strange case of Mulak Chand, a humble watchman in a small village of rural Bengal," is now presented to the public in this country, with a preface from the pen of Mr. Hunter, of Scottish fame. What is the case, and why is it dished up for an English audience? Mulak Chand was tried for the murder of his own daughter, aged nine years. The Sessions Judge, convinced of his guilt, summed up so strongly against the prisoner that the latter was found guilty. The High Court ordered a new trial, with a result that the sentence was quashed. This slight resumé answers the first question; the second inquiry is not so easily disposed of. Dr. Hunter says that "there are instructive points in the case, as illustrating some of the characteristic features in the administration of English and criminal law." What are they? In the first place, it appears that "a capital sentence cannot, in India, be executed when a Sessions Judge pronounces condemnation until it is confirmed by the High Court." This procedure is represented as preferable to the English mode of appeal to the Home Secretary. It may be so; but scarcely, perhaps, from the prisoner's point of view. Secondly, the "miscarriage of justice was due to the corruption of the police, and their determination to support a wrong theory by tutoring a child in falsehoods to swear away its father's life." Possibly; but what of that? The offence is as old as human nature. Then follows a brace of technical peculiarities, the first relating to the admission of evidence in India which would be excluded in England, and the second to the attendance of medical witnesses. This is all very well; but, again, it may be asked, in England, and the second to the attendance of medical witin England, and the second to the attendance of medical witnesses. This is all very well; but, again, it may be asked, what is the raison d'être of this pamphlet? Is it to throw mud at the Sessions Judge, Mr. Dickens? Is it to disparage the competitive system, of which he was a representative? Is it to hold up to odium the police of India, by representing them as much on a par with their brethren in Trafalgar-square—viewed from a separatist standpoint? Is it to sneer at the mode of administering the great Eastern Empire, and cast ridicule upon all which does not meet the approval of Mr. A. Hunter, LL.D., M.D.? Readers must form their own conclusions. We are powerless to supply an answer.

In the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for February, Major-General Reveley-Mitford contributes a pleasant, interesting paper with drawings of his own regarding the little known State of Chamba in the Punjab, the real Raja of which is at the present moment a discontented exile in Russia or France. It is to be hoped that General Mitford will continue his papers on places "out of the beaten track" of the generality of Indian travellers. Major-General de Berry gives a capital description of the several types of de Berry gives a capital description of the several types of Cantonment Magistrates in India, and Dr. Dickinson in his description of Lucknow as a Military Station touches upon the ever-glorious story of the defence and relief of the Residency during the Mutiny. Amongst the professional papers there are two which will be interesting to Service readers, "Portable railways for Field purposes" and "the French railway corps," both fully illustrated.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for February opens with an interesting paper on "German Military Economy," by Captain A'Court, Rifle Brigade. Another interesting contribution, especially at the present time, is the account of the military position of Holland as a neutral power, by C. L'Estrange. Mr. Macalister gives a description of the formation, duties and privileges of the "Queen's Guard." The Scenes in Burma by an Eve witness are continued. Evelough Scenes in Burma by an Eye-witness are continued. Furlough gossips pleasantly as usual "On Leave," and those who are unacquainted with the story of the life of George Washington will find the same told again in a series of chapters continued in the present number.

PAUL BERT'S WORK IN INDO-CHINA

PAUL BERT'S WORK IN INDO-CHINA.

The current number of the Revue Française contains a long article on "Paul Bert in Tong-King and the Missionaries," by M. Lesserteur. The writer says that all the temper and passion displayed during the time of M. Bert's administration in the East having now died away, the position taken up by him and the results of his work may be examined with calmness, and without danger of being accused of partisanship. He puts aside for the present the discussion of all questions save that of M. Bert's policy towards the missionaries in Tong-King. He quotes freely from the work of M. Chailly on M. Bert's administration, which was recently noticed in these columns, and strongly animadverts on what he calls the distorted statements and weak argments of that gentleman. M. Bert started his career in Tong-King completely ignorant of the language, manners, and customs of the country, but with his mind made up as to the course he would pursue, before ever he had an opportunity of fairly sudying the problems with which he had to grapple. A kind of Daltonism afflicted him, and prevented him from seeing the good the missionaries had done; he was too prejudiced, with the prejudice based on ignorance, to succeed in conciliating the opposing parties. The goal he set before himself was to pacify the country and to bind the inhabitants to France by bonds of affection. From this double point of view his work has been a complete failure, and even now, long after his death, his objects have not been attained. He made a lamentable error in the attitude he adopted towards the missionaries. Wherever the latter have made converts, there the people are French at heart and in feeling, in spite of the cruellest persecutions and the savage attacks made on them by the litterati, who style them contemptuously Annamite Frenchmen. The Christians have never taken part in any of the rebellions in Tong-King, Cochin China, or Annam. M. Bert failed to comprehend that here France has the opportunity of making peaceful conques ask the Government to become a great missionary society, but the demands fair play for the missionaries. Before the advent of the demands fair play for the missionaries. Before the advent of the French the Christians and Aunamites dwelt in comparative unity, but since France became an invading power in Indo-China the Christians are looked on as enemies, and are consequently persecuted in the most cruel manner. M. Bert recognised the influence of the missionaries for good on the Annamities; but yet, fearing to increase their moral power, he preferred to treat them as enemies rather than as the most powerful allies he could have had, and M. Lesserteur quotes from a letter of M. Bert, in which this view is apparent. The charges that have been made against the Christians of refusing to pay taxes, and of expecting great privileges, are without foundation, and there is no truth in the statement that they concern themselves more about commerce than religion. It appears to us, however, that even the documents produced by M. Lesserteur himself do not support his conclusion. The letter in which he says M. Bert exhibits his "Daltonism," is a circular to the various French Residents, in which the Resident-General states that he will claim for Christians the same rights as for all other Annamites; the rights and duties of both are the same; but he will claim that he will claim for Christians the same rights as for all other Annamites; the rights and duties of both are the same; but he will claim no privilege for them—surely a very proper equitable policy. M. Lesserteur has one very striking table showing the close and intimate connection between the arrogant and arbitrary policy of French officials in Annam and Tong-King, and the massacres of the native Christians. The entries run like this: in the left hand column "1885, July 5, capture of Hué, by General de Courcy, flight of the king and the regent," in the right hand column "1885, July 11 to 24, mas sacre of three missionaries and 6,000 Christians at Quang-Ngai." This table ranges from Aug. 25, 1883, to Sept. 27, 1885, and demonstrates in a graphic manner the real causes of the frightful massacres of the Christians in Annam during that period.

THE INDIAN BUDGET DEBATE.

A DEBATE on a Budget, the items of which to the minutest detail have already been settled, seems somewhat of a farce, but it is a farce which is annually played in the Supreme Council Chamber at Calcutta. Although no vote can be taken, the members of the Council especially, those who are supposed to be "independent" members, that is to say, independent of official influence, have on these occasions an opportunity of speaking out their personal views, which, having done, the somewhat curious spectacle, has been witnessed of their giving unqualified consent to measures they declare they disapprove of. But the anomaly is now understood in India as merely an official form. The Budget having been framed and settled beforehand in the Viceregal Cabinet, and approved of by the Secretary of State for India, is laid formally on the table of the Council Chamber to be talked over by Honourable Members who choose to air their eloquence, but not to be otherwise meddled with. The precis of a debate in the Council telegraphed by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times this morning contains the sentiments of the several speakers mentioned, but the Budget itself is in no way affected by them. The speeches, however, are not without interest. In spite of the clamour which has been raised (an annual occurrence) in the European and Native Press against the Budget being thus settled previous to public debate upon it, no member, independent or otherwise, appears to have echoed the arguments of the newspapers. The question is not an easy one to decide. If India were an united country, in which the real opinion of the majority of the inhabitants could be obtained, the recommendation which the Government of India is continually receiving to "take the people into its confidence" in the matter of financial administration might well be acted upon. But the difficulty of doing this becomes almost insuperable when the diversities of race, feelings and opinions of the millions have to be considered. Certainly the method introduced by Lord Northbrook of suddenly "springing" the Budget on the community through the columns of the official Gazettewas neither polite nor politic, and the present way of having the privilege of making a little speechifying crargument in open Council is better. It is a sop to the Cerberus of public opinion such as exists in India; not a very satisfactory sop, certainly, but one which for the present, at all events, has to be accepted for the want of a

The financial prospect is not bright, for, in spite of all the virtues of figures, the true deficit it is generally feared (outside the Council Chamber) will be in excess of two crores of rupees. That under such depressing influenceno attempt to augment the Income Tax has been suggested has given general satisfaction throughout India, to Natives and Europeans alike. The enhancement. of the Salt Tax and the levying of a small tax on petroleum have also met with general approval in. India, although, of course, in England objections havebeen raised in newspapers by editors and writers who know as much about the real condition of the peoples of India as they do about the parallax of the moon's orbit. One of these scribes denounces the Petroleum Tax as an abandonment of Free-trade principles and the raising of the price of "an article necessary to countless thousands." The Salt Tax, of course, is held to be a sin against the "impoverished millions of India." Indian financiers and the people of India themselves can afford to smile at thesediatribes. But the serious question remains as to how far these fiscal arrangements will go to meet a deficit which threatens to become larger as time goes on. It is evident that some drastic measures must be taken, but it is equally evident that such measures cannot well or wisely takethe shape of new taxes or the augmentation of old ones. The last straw breaks, says the proverb, the camel's back,. and the Indian Finance Minister has come to very nearly his last straw of possible burdens.

The real remedy lies, as Mr. Evans suggested in the remarks telegraphed by the Times correspondent, in rigorous retrenchment of expenditure in India, and in reduction of the Home Charges. It is a sweeping reduction that is suggested as regards India—namely, the doing away with the separate Governorships of Bombay and Madras, and the abolition of the separate Commanders-in-Chiefships, with all the costly establishments connected with these offices—and there is no doubt that before such reduction can take place there will be much opposition here and in India to the proposed change. Many an old Anglo-Indian, especially of the named Presidencies, will stand aghast at the radicalism of the idea. But the question which will intrude itself in the midst of all arguments and controversies must be, "How is the Government of India to be carried on?" It certainly cannot be hopefully carried on by attempting to meet failing sources of revenue and increased expenditure by adding fresh burdens upon the pecple. Economy, and rigid but wise economy, is the only solution of the financial problem. There are several directions which such economy may take, but the discussion of these must form the subject of another article or more.

OBITUARY.

THE DEATH OF SIR HENRY MAINE

THE DEATH OF SIR HENRY MAINE.

Sir Henry Maine, Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, died at Cannes on Friday evening. He had been in failing health for a long time, and had been ordered to the South of France by his physicians to avoid the rigour of the English winter. As an author Sir Henry Maine had earned for himself considerable distinction, and his works on law were text-books in all the higher legal examinations. It is stated that his probable successor in the Mastership of Trinity Hall will be Sir Charles Turner, late Chief Justice of Madras.

Sir Henry James Sumner Maine, K.C.S.I., LL.D., F.R.S., son of the late James Maine, Esq., M.D., by Eliza, daughter of Andrew Fell, Esq., was, says Men of the Time, born in 1822, and at the usual age entered Pembroke College, Cambridge. His undergraduate career was one of remarkable brilliancy, as will be seen by an enumeration of the honours he obtained during his University course. In 1842 he obtained Sir William Browne's medal for a Greek ode, the Camden medal and the Chancellor's medal for English poetry. In the year following he was elected Craven Scholar, and was approach. In the year following he was elected Craven Scholar, and was awarded Sir William Browne's medal for a Latin ode and epigrams. He graduated B.A. in 1844, when he attained the distinction of Senior Classic, Senior Chancellor's Classical Medallist, and likewise obtained mathematical honours as a Senior Ortime. No Followish being recent at Pembroka Medalist, and likewise obtained mathematical honours as a Senior Optime. No Fellowship being vacant at Pembroke College, the authorities of Trinity Hall offered to Mr. Maine the office of Tutor of that college, which he accepted, and he became a member of Trinity Hall and discharged the duties of Tutor for two years. In 1847 he was elected as Regius Professor of the Civil Law on the retirement of the Rev. J. W. Geldart, a half-brother of the late Master of Trinity Hall, from that office. The promotion of Mr. Maine to a Professorship at the early age of 25 was an exceptional advancerom that once. The promotion of Mr. Maine to a Fro-fessorship at the early age of 25 was an exceptional advance-ment. He, however, only held the appointment until 1854, when he relinquished it to undertake the duties of Reader on Jurisprudence at the Middle Temple. Mr. Maine had been called to the Bar in 1850. In 1862 he proceeded to India on being appointed Law Member of the Supreme Govern-ment and during his toward of this efficiential delayers. on being appointed Law Member of the Supreme Government, and during his tenure of this office originated a large number of legislative improvements. After nearly seven years of noble work done for Indian progress, he returned to England in October, 1869, and was elected to the newly-created Corpus Professorship of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford [in 1870. In November, 1871, he was appointed a member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, on which occasion he was created a K.C.S.I. In 1885 he was offered the Permanent Under-Secretaryship of State at the Home Office, but he declined it. In 1875 he delivered the Rede 'Lecture at Cambridge, the subject being "The Effects of Observation of India on Modern European Thought." This lecture attracted considerable attention, and was published in a pamphlet form. After the death of Dr. Geldart, Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge, the Fellows of that college were unable to agree in the choice of his successor. One party was in favour of the Rev. H. Latham, the Senior Fellow, while an equal number desired to elect Professor Fawcett. In these circumstances, and in order to prevent the appointment lapsing to the Duke and in order to prevent the appointment lapsing to the Duke of Devonshire, Chancellor of the University, the Fellows consented to a compromise; and, by a unanimous vote, elected Sir H. Maine to the vacant mastership, December 27th, 1877. In May, 1878, he signified to the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford his intention to resign the Corpus Professorship of Jurisprudence at the end of the year. Previously to his resignation he delivered (November, 1878), in the hall of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, a series of lectures on "Modern Theories of succession to property after death, and the corrections of them suggested by recent researches." His works are "Roman Law and Legal Education," in "Cambridge Essays," 1856; "Ancient Law: its connection with the Early History of Society, and its relation to Modern Ideas," 1861; "Village Communities in the East and West: Six Lectures delivered at Oxford," 1871; and "Lectures on the Early History of Institutions," 1875; "Dissertations on Early Law and Custom," chiefly selected from Lectures delivered at Oxford," 1883; "Popular Government," 1885. On April 28th, 1883, he was elected a Foreign Associate of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, in the place of the late Ralph Waldo Emerson. and in order to prevent the appointment lapsing to the Duke ${f Waldo\ Emerson.}$

THE ASSETS OF THE OLD ORIENTAL BANK.

At the ordinary general meeting of the Assets Realisation Company, Mr. J. S. Balfour referred to the purchases which they had made from time to time of claims of the old Oriental Bank Corporation. pany, Mr. J. S. Balfour referred to the purchases which they had made from time to time of claims of the old Oriental Bank Corporation. There had been some litigation respecting the arrangement they had come to with the liquidator of that institution for purchasing the whole of its outstanding assets at a price which would secure a certain payment to its creditors. That had been a most difficult matter for them to come to a decision on; but, as the result of the most careful consideration, they offered a particular price, and the proposal was sanctioned by Mr. Justice Chitty. Some of the company's opponents thought they were getting the assets too cheaply, and appealed against Mr. Justice Chitty's decision to the Lords Justices of Appeal, before whom an offer was made to give £80,000 more than the company had proposed and half the surplus profits. It was held, however, that that offer had come too late, and that the company's proposal, being bond fide, and having been accepted by the Court below, must be confirmed. Their opponents had threatened to take the matter to the House of Lords, and therefore he would say no more on the matter except that the directors believed, as years went by, the company would make a legitimate profit on the transaction, though the shareholders must not rely upon the estimate of their opponents of £80,000, as the latter might have had other than financial motives in making their offer. The amount of the assets in question stood at the beginning of last year at £1,250,000, whereas on the 31st ult. they amounted to £900,000. They thus gradually expected to get all their money back, with a fair profit. with a fair profit.

THE TARIFF IN INDIO-CHINA.

The Temps says the French tariff is ruining Indo-China, which until recently prospered with a thriving and rising trade. A large share of it was, of course, carried on with England. Politicians here pretended to see a danger in this circumstance, and they hearkened willingly to the industrial monopolists, led by the Rouen cotton spinners, who wanted to shut out their Manchester and Birmingham rivals from the markets of Indo-China recently welded into a French colony with a the industrial monopolists, led by the Rouen cotton spinners, who wanted to shut out their Manchester and Birmingham rivals from the markets of Indo-China, recently welded into a French colony with a population of 30,000,000. Unlike England, who upon taking possession of a new land opens it to the trade of all on equal terms, France behaves like the dog in the manger. Is it surprising that while such an aggressive commercial policy is followed traders of other countries should, from sheer self-defence, stand in the way of French extension? But to return to Cochin China. The export of rice, which was its whole fortune, is at a stop. They could hardly compete with Siam and Burmah rice, on which the export duty is 5 per cent, while rice shipped at Saigon paid 15 per cent. The new tariff-general having raised the cost of articles hitherto imported by Chinese merchants to be exchanged for rice, the natives have left off selling, finding it no longer pays. The Temps shows that unless the tariff is repealed the surface under culture of rice will diminish at a rapid rate, instead of as hitherto expanding incessantly, for whereas in past years the stock of rice was almost out when the harvest began, there remained this year on the eve of harvest 125,000 tons unconsumed. The loss on this amount in respect to export duty is £60,000. There is a set-off against this of £28,000, being the increase in Customs receipts. The nett result is a deficit of £32,000 for the half-year's Budget. The losses entailed on labourers, traders, and artisans are not to be estimated.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally decile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances as fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to fournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it...there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

.... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sone from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C. in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

. . . . The Calcutta Review has not only throughout is career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineler Review. Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1888.

-General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 27th January; from Allahabad and Madras to the 25th January; and from Calcutta to the 24th

January.

THE Imperial Legislative Council met at Calcutta on Jau. 19, when the Hon. Mr. Westland, in presenting the Report on the Bill amending the Indian Stamp Act, showed how the financial troubles of the Government re-act even in such small matters as the duty on fire insurance policies. He admitted the rate was higher than in England, but added that the present financial position was not such as to warrant the Government in proposing any further relief, beyond the reduction to something like a proportionate rate of the duty upon short term policies, and the Bill had therefore been restricted to its original purpose.

A Gazette Extraordinary, published at Calcutta on the same date, notifies that from that day the duty to be paid on salt shall be one rupee per maund in Lower Burma, and Rs. 2-8 in British India, with the exception of the Trans-Indus districts of the Punjab. The increase of the salt duty by this eight annas will probably give some 2) lakhs in India during the next $2\frac{1}{2}$ months, while raising the tax from three annas to one rupee in Burma should yield another two lakhs or more. The increase in the course of the next financial year should be something like one crore and fifty lakhs in India and $12\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs in Burma.

THE Viceroy was expected to take the chair at the annual meeting of Lady Dufferin's Fund on February 8th.

MR. W. B. LAWRENCE, Under Secretary in the Revenue Department, will take up the duties of Secretary to the Fund on Major Cooper's departure for England in March.

MR. GIRDLESTONE, who was to leave for Europe by the French mail steamer of January 27th, has resigned his appointment in Nepal, but holds himself at the disposal of the Viceroy for future employment.

Ms. Corder has definitely decided to go home on leave at the beginning of the hot weather.

At the anniversary of the Lyall Library at Meerut a portrait of Sir Alfred was unveiled by the Commissioner of the Division.

Nothing new has transpired in connection with affairs in Nepal. The Minister is now on his way to Calcutta, and he would hardly leave his post if he was in any fear of his rival.

RUNBIR JUNG is said to be in Calcutta. It has transpired that he never crossed the border.

AYUB KHAN is to receive a personal pension similar in amount to that given to his brother, the ex-Amir Yakub. A separate allowance will be made for the large number of Sirdars who accompany him to India.

AYUB KHAN and his party are accompanied from Meshed by General Maclean's Native attaché Allah Baksh. They will be met by Nawab Hassan Ali Khan near Teheran.

H.H. THE AMIR OF AFGHANISTAN left Kabul for Jellalabad on the 5th January, and reached Butkok the same day. On the following day he reached Samucha-i-Mulla Umar. The British Agent, Lieut.-Colonel Ataulla Khan, accompanied his Highness.

THE Amir is said to be bringing great pressure to bear on the frontier tribes to compel them to send Jirgas into Jellalabad. Nearly all have refused, as the greatest mistrust prevails regarding Abdurrahman's intentions.

SARDAR AFZUL-UL-MULK, the second son of the Ruler of Chitral, had an interview with H.E. the Viceroy at Calcutta on January 17th. He was to leave for his return journey with Mr. Plowden on January 31st.

CAPTAIN C. L. GRIESBACH, C.I.E., Deputy Superintendent of the Geological Survey of India, has been permitted to take employment under the Amir of Afghanistan for the purpose of developing the mineral resources of that country.

It is stated that the expert whom it was intended to engage in France to investigate the silk-worm disease in Bengal is not likely to be brought out now.

THE Reja of Kapurthala has left Calcutta for the Puja > highly pleased with his visit.

A FATAL cricket accident is reported from Calcutta, a Native boy named Satcowry Mitter having been killed almost instantly by a blow on the head from a ball.

The last has evidently not been heard of the Macauliffe-Browne quarrel. The latest development is the filing of an action for libel by Mr. W. E. Browne against Mr. Macauliffe, Divisional Judge, of Sialkot.

A FIND of good coal is reported from the south of Kashmir. An officer of the Geological Survey will be deputed to report on the discovery.

SARDAR MUHAMMAD AYUB KHAN and the Principal Sirdars with him have left Meshed on their way to India, viâ Teheran and Baghdad.

THE Maharaja of Vizianagram will attend the Chapter of the Order of the Indian Empire to be invested with the Insignia of a Knight Commander of the Order.

THE report of the Debt Commission regarding Sir Horace Rumbold's claims is now before his Highness's Government. The Commissioners are not unanimous in their opinion, and the final award will therefore have to be made by Government.

THE Khyber levies which keep open the road between Jamrud and Lundi Kotal are to be increased by 200 men.

THE Commandants of Lucknow and Bareilly battalions of the Burma military police have been authorised to continue recruiting until further orders.

COLONEL LITTLE, 12th Bengal Lancers, commanding at Bhamo, has been dangerously wounded. As he was entering the bath-room his Madrasee servant came from behind and cut him down with a dah. The Colonel, managing to drag himself to the door, celled the sentry, who gave the alarm. The servant was captured hiding in some grass. Although he has confessed, he gives no reason for the act. Both wounds are very deep. One on the left shoulder runs down to the shoulder blade, and the other on the left side of the face and neck. The little finger of the left hand was also nearly severed.

The Registrar of the Moulmein Judge's Court, whose official salary is Rs. 250 per month, made a claim for one lakh nine thousand rupees for services rendered as Officia Assignee to an estate of Moulmein foresters who were adjudicated insolvents, but whose insolvency was annulled within the month, during which period nothing was done to realise the estate or collect money. This demand was resisted by the creditors. The Chamber of Commerce has for a long time urged the Government to reform the existing abuses of the Official Assignee's office.

It was discovered on December 25th that Rs. 25,000 belonging to the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company has been stolen. The cashier of the Company sent that day Rs. 24,200 in cash and Rs. 800 in cheques to the Chartered Mercantile Bank by the head durwan of the Company in a cab. Owing to the cashier's illness the bank-book was not checked. Only recently it was discovered that the sum had not been credited to the Company by the bank. On being questioned the durwan asserts that he daly lodged the money, which, however, the bank officials deny. The case is being investigated by detectives.

THE Maharajas of Jeypore and Dumraon visit Calcutta for the investiture ceremony.

A PROPOSAL is before the Nizam to change the proposed, line of railway to Chanda, and instead to run the extension to Raipore. It will shorten the distance to Calcutta, and open out a much richer grain-growing country. It is probable that his Highness will send a deputation to the Government of India to represent the matter.

SIR ANDREW CLARKE, who went on a mission to Siam arrived viá Singapore in the steamer Bellerophon. He represents a syndicate of English merchants who are endeavouring to secure from the King sanction for a line of railway to open up South-Western China from Bangkok via the valleys of the Meinam and Meikon Rivers, which, it is believed, is a far preferable route to that proposed by Mr. Colquboun from Moulmein, where every pound of freight would have to be raised and lowered 24,000 feet.

THE French in Tonquin are known to contemplate a railway with a similar object along the valley of the Red River. Sir Andrew Clarke has been selected, as he is well known to the King and his advisers. When he was Governor of the Straits Settlements in 1875 he was instrumental in obtaining for Siam its present constitution.

GREAT dissatisfaction is felt at the action of the Customs - authorities in connection with the increased salt duties. Although the department admit that under the Sea Customs Act salt ships sailing for Rangoon from any port before the increase was announced would be exempt from such increased duty, they contend that cargoes actually arrived at Rangoon before the increase was announced and had partially unloaded are liable to the increase. The Chamber of Commerce forwarded a telegram of remonstrance to the Government of India.

A RECENT ruling of the High Court that cow-killing is not punishable under the Indian Penal Code has created a feeling of utmost consternation amongst the orthodox Hindus at Allahabad, who have held a crowded meeting, and memorialised the Viceroy in Council on the subject.

A QUANTITY of gold, about sixty seers in weight in bars, has been found in the compound of the Golconda Brigade Mess by coolies working there. Nawab Afsur Jung, commanding the brigade, will send the gold to the Nizam's Government.

The Commission of Inquiry into Mr. F. Larpent's conduct as Registrar of the Punjab University commenced its sitting on Jan. 26. Mr. Larpent appeared and stated that he should not be represented by counsel, and asked the Court to make the inquiry as short as possible. Mr. E. W. Parker, who is prosecuting on behalf of the Government, replied that he would endeavour to meet Mr. Larpent on that point. The proceedings bid fair to be lengthy, as there are seventy-five witnesses to be examined—fifty for the prosecution, and twenty-five for the defence.

THE Syndicate of the Punjab University unanimously resolved to appoint Dr. Aurel Stein, "a native of Hungary," Principal of the Oriental College, and Registrar of the University of Lahore on probation till Oct. 15 next.

COLONEL H. V. RIDDEL, a District Judge in the Punjab Commission, died at Mooltan on Jan. 14. Colonel Riddel, who had been ailing for some time past, took furlough in November last, but was prevented by the state of his health from leaving Mooltan.

THE Accountant-General in the Pablic Works Department, Colonel Filgate, takes two years' furlough from the first week in July, and retires.

CAPTAIN H. S. P. DAVIES, Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, takes furlough, it is believed, for six months from April next, and on his return will be employed on settlement work.

SIE E. BCCK will, it is understood, preside over the Committee for collecting evidence in reply to the Secretary of State's order anent horse-breeding operations.

MR. GEORGE SODEN GOAD, Manager of the Joyhing Tea Gardens, North Lakhimpur, was drowned in the Subansiri river on the 7th Jan. No particulars are given of the incident.

The annual report of the Chamber of Commerce says the course of business throughout 1887 has been quiet and uneventful, and there has been a marked absence of burning questions. The chief cause of this has undoubtedly been the comparative inaction of the Legislative Department of the Government of India. Not only have new Bills been few, and in a commercial sense unimportant, but several measures of weight and moment, which were suggested or reviewed by the Committee in the previous year, have made little apparent progress. The report complains that no progress has been made with the Indian Bankruptcy Bill. The Chamber considers that Government would strengthen their hands if they summoned a representative of the Commercial community to their councils for the discussion of the Budget, and points out that this is already done in Hong Kong with excellent results. In India, where the commercial and manufacturing interests of the country are of immeasurably greater magnitude and more deeply concern the welfare of the Empire at large, it could not fail to yield equally beneficial results.

NOTES.

THE most important news from India is that which has come by wire to the effect that Lord Dufferin resigns his office at the close of the present year. The announcement has been received with surprise in England and in India, and, of course, all manner of surmises have been rife as to the cause of this step being taken. His Excellency's decision has been received by the Press of England with marked expressions of regret, and the extracts from the Press of India, European and Native, telegraphed by the Times correspondent this morning, and which will be found in another column, show that the regret has been great and general in India also.

SURMISES as to the cause of the resignation are now almost impertinent in the face of the assurance given by Lord Dufferin himself. At the meeting of the Legislative Council on Friday last he spoke frankly upon the subject. He said that "it was with no light heart that he had accepted the post, which was at once the most honourable and the most important that could be held by any subject, and he could not resign it without pain and regret. He, therefore, desired it to be understood that he was actuated by imperative private considerations alone. From the moment of his arrival in the country not a shadow of difference had arisen between himself and the Home Government, and he trusted that he had in no way forfeited the confidence of the Secretary of State. He could not sufficiently express his deep gratitude for the generous support he had received from successive Ministers at the India Office."

"Nor had anything occurred in India to render his position as Viceroy less attractive or agreeable. On the contrary, the entire European community, and all creeds and classes of Natives, had given him constant proofs of their good will, and he only wished he were better able to show his appreciation of so much loyalty and kindness.

Domestic reasons alone had induced him to retire; and, after all, his tenure of office would be nearly or quite as long as that of any of his immediate predecessors. After four years of such constant labour and anxiety as the Viceroy was obliged to bear he could not but feel that it was for the public interest that he should resign his charge into the hands of a younger man, especially as the general condition of the country was prosperous and peaceful. Had it been otherwise he would have gladly sacrificed every personal consideration in the cause of duty."

THE announcement that he would be succeeded in the Viceroyalty by Lord Lansdowne has also been a general surprise. On this point it was only to be expected that Lord Dufferin would say something, and of course he could only say what was courteous and complimentary:—

Regarding his successor, he was very pleased that the Government had chosen the grandson of one of the most venerable of statesmen, under whom he was early initiated into the conduct of public affairs. Lord Lansdowne was now giving great satisfaction as Governor-General of Canada. He was in the prime of life, and was married to a most charming lady, and he would certainly gain universal popularity and acceptance whether presiding over the social or the political world of India.

This is all very well, but the feeling of all classes in India to-day is possibly best expressed in the well known lines:—

"As in a theatre, the eyes of men, After a well-graced actor leaves the stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next."

THE remainder of the news telegraphed from India is uneventful. A little frontier war, which some writers have been prophesying as certain to occur, will not, we think, take place. The only news from Sikkim was that the Rajah had moved to Gunstock, some distance to the south of his capital, and had asked Mr Paul, Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, to meet him there. It is therefore hoped that he is coming to his senses, and means to amend his ways.

The last official bulletin from Rangoon, dated Feb. 10, reports that small dacoities are prevalent in several disdricts in Upper Burma, especially in Myingyan, Maiktila, and Yemethen. In Maiktila a loyal Thugyee has been murdered by dacoits, who carried off four guns and some revenue. Part of this gang was pursued and overtaken by the police, and two dacoits and four guns were captured. A large band of dacoits has twice attacked and plundered the village of Thadunne, near Mahlaing, carrying off a number of cattle, and making prisoners of several villagers. Ottama's camp in the dense jungle near Legaing was surprised by the Military Police under Inspector Hertz on the morning of the 6th inst. One dacoit was killed and four were wounded, and with eleven others were taken prisoners. Sixteen guns and twelve dahs were captured. Ottama escaped into the jungle.

THE mineral wealth of Upper Burma has not been long in attracting attention. Applicants have already sought leave to prospect for gold and coal. Applications for leases of land for cultivating, stock-rearing, and other purposes in Upper Burma, are being made to the Local Government. A European gentleman has recently been offered a lease of 100 acres of land in the Ava district free for one year for the cultivation of barley. Efforts are also being made to stimulate the cultivation of wheat, potatoes, and tobacco. In the Yeu district a free distribution of Havanna tobacco seed has been made, and a small bonus has been offered to the cultivator who produces the best crop of tobacco.

The Army and Navy Gazette reminds its readers that the Cathedral at Laho the Order of the Indian Empire is exclusively in the patronage of the Indian Viceroy, the Secretary of State exercising no control over it whatever. The Star of India, on the other hand, is exclusively in the gift of the Secretary of State, although recommendations in favour of the officers of the Army serving in India and Native-born gentlemen are always received through the Viceroy. Our military contemporary adds that on the occasion of the recent Jubilee celebration several officers and officials who expected to have been decorated were disappointed "because of their having sought the favour of a recommendation in the wrong quarter." Can this be so? Has any officer and gentleman of the proud profession of arms asked for a C.I.E.? Surely only an enemy hath said so.

YET, once upon a time in India, when a high official—one of the Viceregal advisers—was asked, "Why did So-and-So get the C.S.I.?" he is reported to have answered, "I cannot say; I suppose he asked for it." And after the Delhi Assemblage there was a story told of an eminent political who, on receiving one of the silver commemorative medals struck for the occasion, returned it with the remark that he thought that there "must be some mistake," as he expected a gold one. He got it.

MAJOR-GENERAL LYNCH, who has been appointed to the command of the Division of the Bengal Army which falls vacant at the end of March on the return to England of Lieut.-General Sir Martin Dillon, has seen considerable active service in the East. He scrved in Persia with the Scinde Horse in 1857, but joined Havelock's force on its first taking the field in India, and was present in every action fought by that column. After the recapture of Cawnpore, where his horse was killed under him, he served as second in command of the volunteer cavalry with the Oudh Field Force, and was present in all the actions fought by that force until the relief of Lucknow on September 25, 1857, and defence of the Residency until its final relief by Lord Clyde on November 24 following. He was severely wounded, but has survived to be the recipient of several honours, and his return to India as a Divisional Commander will give general satisfaction to all ranks of the army in Bengal.

Colonel Sartorius, of the 1st Beloochees, who recently marched through the Southern Shan and Red Karen country, is stated to have made an interesting and elaborate report on the country traversed. He speaks highly of the district. Iron ore of extraordinary richness was found at Saga. Tin is plentiful in Lower Kerennie, and coal in abundance exists at the Lowelon mountain. Silver, saltpetre, and sulphur were also found. The Rosambhe Lake is described as being as beautiful as the lakes of Cashmere, while the cataracts of Kazor, 130ft. high, are perhaps the finest in the East. Terrible anarchy and disorder have prevailed, owing to constant wars between the petty chiefs who govern the country. Colonel Sartorius dwells on the marked improvement in and revival of trade which have already taken place in districts within reach of the influence of Fort Sedman, where a British garrison is maintained.

It is satisfactory to learn that steps are being taken to raise a memorial in honour of the late good and muchloved Sir Robert Montgomery. A meeting, including Sir Frederic Halliday, K.C.B., late member of the Council of India, General R. Lawrence, C.B. (brother of the late Lord Lawrence), Sir Richard Meade, K.C.S.I., late Resident at Hyderabad, Mr. P. S. Melville, C.S.I., late Resident at Baroda, Major-General Saunders Abbott, General Abbott, C.B., Major-General G. Hutchinson, C.B., C.S.I., R.E., Mr. Brand Sapte, C.B., Colonel Aikman, V.C., Lieutenant-General T. M'Leod Innes, V.C., R.E., General Maclagan, R.E., Colonel Sir James Browne, K.C.S.I., C.B., R.E., Mr. Brandreth, Mr. Thomas H. Thornton, C.S.I., and many others, was held on the 9th inst., when it was resolved that subscriptions (limited to a maximum of £5 5s) be invited from the friends of the deceased for the purpose of placing a memorial tablet in the cathedral at Lahore, and, if funds permit, another memorial—in a form to be determined hereafter—in London. Letters were received from Major-General Sir Henry Rawlinson, Sir John Morris, and others, cordially approving the objects of the meeting, and a considerable sum was subscribed in the room.

In the Legislative Council on Friday, Mr. Westland, on presenting the report of the Select Committee on the Petroleum Bill, said it had been determined to levy a fixed sum per gallon instead of an ad valorem rate as originally proposed. This course was taken in accordance with the general wish of the course was taken in accordance with the general wish of the mercantile community, and the duty would, moreover, be easier to collect. The rate would come to about 8 per cent, and would yield a total of about ten lakhs. The definitions had also been amended so as to exclude oil meant for lubricating purposes. The Bill was then passed without debate.

The third annual meeting in connection with Lady Dufferin's Female Medical Aid Fund was held on Wednesday. The Viceroy presided, and among the speakers were the Governor of Madras, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, the Maharajah of Durbunga, the Nawab of Moorshedabad, and the Honourable Messrs. Scoble and Evans. A resolution was passed that the association should be incorporated. The report, which had previously been circulated, showed that the financial position was highly satisfactory, and that the association now had previously been circulated, showed that the financial position was highly satisfactory, and that the association now possesses investments giving an annual income of 30,000 rupees. The jubilee collection was very successful, and included magnificent donations from many Native princes and noblemen. Lord Connemara, in his speech, said that Lady Dufferin's name would live in the pages of Indian history. The Viceroy, replying to a vote of thanks, described the association as being now placed upon a basis which never could fail, and added that its benevolent operations would continue to extend and to penetrate further into Indian homes. He concluded by paying a tribute to the devotion of the honorary concluded by paying a tribute to the devotion of the honorary News has been received of a tragedy on the Chittagong frontier. Lieutenant Stewart, of the Prince of Wales's Leinster Regiment (Royal Canadians), while surveying with a small party in the hill tracts within the Lushai frontier, was surprised on the morning of the 3rd inst. by about 200 Kukis armed with guns and knives. He and two European soldiers with him made a gallant resistance, and defended a hut for with him made a gallant resistance, and defended a hut for some time, till Lieutenant Stewart was at last shot and one soldier was stabbed to death. The other is still missing. Ten frontier police formed the escort, but three of them were absent at the time, and only three of the remainder could reach their rifles in time. Of these one was shot, one returned to headquarters wounded, and one is missing. Mr. Murray, direct superintendent of police, has gone to investigate the affair, and messengers were at once sent to warn Lieutenant Baird, who was engaged with another survey party on the neighbouring hills.

Baird, who was engaged with another survey party on the neighbouring hills.

Sir Edward Walter, commanding the Corps of Commissionaries, who for the last four months has been travelling through Northern India in connection with his schemes for providing employment for old soldiers, left Calcutta for Madras last Sunday. He will proceed thence to Australia. I understand that his inquiries are likely to have a most useful result, and if he succeeds in coning was proposed of work for time. and if he succeeds in opening up a prospect of work for time-expired soldiers in Australia he will have conferred a distinct benefit upon the British Army in India.

LORD DUFFERIN'S RESIGNATION.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 12.

For the last three days the Viceroy's resignation has engrossed the public attention to the almost complete exclusion of other topics. The news was received with general expressions of regret, and at first many speculations were hazarded as to the cause of the resignation. These speculations were set at rest by Lord Dufferin's emphatic statement in Council on Friday that the step was due to domestic reasons, and it is now known that the state of Lady Dufferin's health, and her and her husband's natural wish not to be separated from their children, have led to this resolution.

The tone of the Press is generally one of regret. The Calcutta Englishman says:—

cutta Englishman says:

"Lord Dufferin's Indian career has been one of personal popularity and political success; and whatever differences of opinion may exist regarding his measures, it may be said that his administration as a whole has been characterised by singular ability, clear-sighted statesmanship, and consistent regard for the welfare of the Empire."

The Indian Daily News considers it a distinct misfortune that the country should lose his rule just when most is expected from him. Much was expected, and in some respects he has done enough to secure a lasting name. He had to encounter many difficulties, and some serious administrative blunders have been added to the financial troubles. The Statesman says:

"The news has fallen like a bolt out of the blue, and public regret will be deep and widespread. He was unfortunate enough to receive as a bequest from his predecessors two great questions—those of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Afghan Boundary Commission—for neither of which was he responsible. Nevertheless he won steadily the respect and confidence of all classes." confidence of all classes.

The Pioneer observes:-

"The country had given the Viceroy its confidence from the day of his arrival, and the announcement will take everyone The truest compliment that can be paid him is to say he never put India's faculty for unquestioning acquiescence to so severe a strain as by now saying that it is necessary he should go.'

The Lahore Civil and Military Gazette believes that no honest friend of India will learn without regret that the strong hands which have ruled the country for the last three strong hands which have ruled the country for the last three years will prematurely hand the reins of power to another. Lord Dufferin, it declares, has adhered manfully to the course that true statesmanship marked out, under unprecedented financial pressure, against persistent crosses from home, and in spite of the foolish clamour from Calcutta. It proceeds to suggest that public meetings should be held for the purpose of expressing gratitude and admiration. The Bombay Times of India gives Lord Dufferin credit for completely putting an end to the excitement and bitter race antagonism unhappily fostered by Lord Ripon, and adds:—

"While Lord Ripon was remitting taxation, reducing the army, and in the name of philanthropy setting us all by the ears, the Russians were stealthily approaching the Afghan frontier. Lord Dufferin successfully stopped their approach, won the Ameer's confidence, increased the strength and value of the army, and carried out a regular system of frontier defence. His Indian career might be summed up in the names of 'Penjdeh' and 'Upper Burma.'"

The Bombay Gazette remarks:-

"The news has been received with surprise and regret. The record of Lord Dufferin's Indian career will certainly not be dull. It will find its analogue rather in Lord Dalhousie's than in Lord Mayo's. It is too soon now to try to arrive at any general judgment on his policy.

The Madras Mail thinks the historians will not regard Lord Dufferin's Indian career with unqualified satisfaction.

"He had, however, great difficulties, such as to smooth the angry passions excited by Lord Ripon's sentimental ignorance, and to contend with financial troubles largely due to Lord Ripon's shortsighted sacrifice of revenue and purblind frontier policy. Lord Dufferin will not rank with Lord Dalhousie or Lord Mayo. Too much was expected of him, and if he to some extent disappointed expectation, it was because he had to play a fistful of cards."

So far the opinions given have been those of the Anglo Indian Press. The Native newspapers are more sparing in praise, while some express satisfaction. The Bengalee says:—

"Lord Dufferin's rule has been marked with vigour in his foreign policy, without a single measure of domestic reform. But a year yet remains, and much may be done in a year."

The Amrita Bazaar Patrika believes that the nation will be deeply grieved to hear the news. Nothing affects the Indian people so much as a genuine, kindly heart and personal amiability, both of which qualities Lord Dufferin possesses in an extreme degree. The Indian Mirror, on the ther hand, describes Lord Dufferin as a distinct failure, and charges him with having caused dissension between the Hindoos and Mahomedans, and added heavily to the burdens of the Empire in the absence of war and famine. The best it of the Empire in the absence of war and famine. The b can say for him is that he has been generally inoffensive.

A LITTLE MORALITY.

(Pioneer.) Morality, heavenly link, It is to thee that I drink! I'm awfully fond, Of that heavenly bond, Morality, heavenly link!

-Bab Ballads.

The Government of India work up with a start. The air was full of flippant language. "Bless our souls," said the Government of India, "this is painful! They are actually getting irreverent. We must do something." They called up Government of India, "this is painful! They are actually getting irreverent. We must do something." They called up all the Secretaries and took their opinions, and the Secretaries said with one voice that there was nothing like Morality. "Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control," murmured all the Secretaries, because they had read Tennyson in the six-shilling edition and had ideas on governing India. "The fact of the matter is," said the Government of India, impressively, "something has gone wrong somewhere. We don't quite know "something has gone wrong somewhere. We don't quite know what it is, but we are determined to set it right." And all the Secretaries murmured applausively: "Set it right. By all Secretaries murmured applausively: Det 10 1,000.

And, really, the state of affairs demanded some sort of correction. The Government of India was in the habit of giving little boys four rupees a month to sit still and load themselves up with Spenser's "Faery Queen," pp. 1 to 131 inclusive, and Kingsley's "Westward Ho!" and Colenso as far as Decimal Fractions, and Fawcett's "Political Economy," and "Hypatia," and the "Elements of Logic," and whole pages of "Chaucer," besides unlimited quantities of History, and things of that nature. On the strength of his four rupees a month, the boy took a wife, and by the time that his subsistence allowance nature. On the strength of his four rupees a month, the boy took a wife, and by the time that his subsistence allowance came to an end, he was usually the owner of two children, in addition to a mass of mixed information regarding Magna Charta, Deucalion, Empedocles on Etna, "Let us take a walk down Fleet Street," "Wilkes and Number 45," Colonel Olcott's lectures, and the back numbers of the "Theosophist." Just as he was comfortably settling down, and had brought his wife's widowed sister and a younger brother or two to share his wealth, the Government was in the habit of withdrawing the subsistence allowance, and saying, cheerfully, "Now we've given you a first-class education. Please walk about a little and get a living. We regret to say that our offices are full." Then that boy would go away very sorrowfully, because he was a married man with an indifferent constitution and a large experience of life, and would curse the Government of India by all his own gods and a host of new ones from the "Rape of the Lock," and the logic books, and King Lear, and all Macaulay's, including the "Lays of Ancient Rome." At first the Government of India used to listen smirkfully, and pat him on the head, and say to everyone, Rome." At first the Government of India used to listen smirkfully, and pat him on the head, and say to everyone, "Hear him swear! All those bad words are out of our primers. Isn't he fluent? That's intellectual activity, that is! You wait a few years, and you'll see the poets and the novelists, and the historians and the eminent manufacturers, and the alone headed with the telephone dealer in the interval of the same and the same novelists, and the historians and the eminent manufacturers, and the clear-headed engineers just jostling each other through the length and breadth of the Empire." So the Universe lit a cheroot, and waited for the procession of proficients. But the boy who was also a married man, the child who was a father, did not want to be a poet, or any of those unremunerative things. He had his children to look after, and, because he was an old man at thirty-five and generally died at forty-five, he wanted to do his work quickly. His fathers had an extensive literature of proverbs, which said nothing about going away from homes and carving out careers, but a good deal about the necessity of enjoying a great man's protection, and climbing over other men's shoulders to authority. Some of the proverbs said, "A mahout is as strong as the elephant when he is on its neck," and others that, "It is better to be the foot-servant of a king than a chief of two villages." The boy believed these proverbs, because they were drilled into him in his home life, which was as entirely distinct from his school life as anything you can well conceive. At school he spoke one language, at home another; at school he fressed in one fashion, at home in another; at school he thought in one groove, at home in another; and so on, because he came of a very, very old stock.

Later on, he discovered how to print the thoughts that very, very old stock.

Very, very old stock.

Later on, he discovered how to print the thoughts that filled his poor brain, and he mixed up the teachings of the "purchits" with Fawcett and Mill, and tangled the Shasters with Spencer, and strung "Kalidasa and Cleopatra" in alternate lumps. The Government of India was immensely pleased, and said:—"Now you'll see! This is the beginning of a National Literature. Observe the fireworks!" But the National Literature had been written by the boy's forefathers ages and ages ago in their own way: and ages and ages ago. ages and ages ago in their own way; and, ages and ages ago, the clear-headed engineer had done the national monuments, also in their own way. The stock was an old, worn out stock, also in their own way. The stock was an old, worn out stock, and, as has been said, Death came early to the boy and those and, as has been said, Death came early to the boy and those like him. Some of his writings were peculiar and not exactly what the Government of India had expected. They had sown Carlyle and there came up anything but "Hero Worship." It rather resembled the "French Revolution." But the Government of India said:—"For goodness sake don't interfere with it. It will settle down and leave the National Literature and the Legitimate Political Aspiration." The German read a few pages of the stuff and said dreamily:—"Mine Gott! You haf missed der soul-life-drift of dese people. Dey haf der power of defining afrydings, but dey haf not de power of understandings what is der meaning of der definition. I tell you dey are de soul-mit-ancient clouds-encumbered-double life, bejointed de soul-mit-ancient clouds-encumbered-double life, bejointed people, and you haf dreated them as dough dey was into-dertendency-of politic-scope-seeing Teutons. Dere will be, as you Englanders say, Helltobay!" But nobody attended to the German, partly because no one could understand him, and German, partly because no one could understand him, and partly because everyone was so busy copying the pattern of his pickelhaube. The Frenchman shrugged his shoulders and said:—"Mon Dieu! I have known you English for fools these eight hundred years. But you are to-day such fools as I have never seen. No, never." The Frenchman was volatile, and had made such a mess of a place called Tonquin that no one attended to him.

The boy went on his wonderful way, his poor head swimming with the things he had picked up in the days of his subsistence allowance, and at last created the "New English." Everybody laughed at it, but it was all his own—unique and unapproachable. And the Government of India shook its head for the "New English" seemed a poor distillation from the strong wine poured out so lavishly. Then the boy found his metier, poor fellow. You must understand that his mother tongue was almost inconceivably rich in terms of abuse, and the language of his home life bristled with peculiar terms and strange twists of expression which would have deeply shocked the language of his home life bristled with peculiar terms and strange twists of expression which would have deeply shocked the Government of India had it heard them. But, as the Government of India was nervously anxious not to penetrate into the sacredness of his domestic life or to upset his religious prejudices, it missed the wonderful language which the boy would use towards his wife, or his mother, when the one had been misbehaving herself or the other had slapped one of his children. When to the immense natural resources of the been misbehaving herself or the other had slapped one of his children. When to the immense natural resources of the country were added some Emerson, Carlyle, Swift, and Johnson, the result even in temperate hands would have been fine. But, the boy was, by heredity and national temperament, devoid of any sense of proportion, and constitutionally prone to exaggeration. The style and composition of the old-time histories might have convinced the Government of India of this, but they prove covered to look this; but they never cared to look.

So the boy found his "metier" which was to abuse the Government of India; and here everything was in his favour. Government of India; and here everything was in his favour. By the irony of Destiny he abused it, not for half-poisoning him and giving him indigestion, but for not poisoning him half quickly enough. The New English was a flexible tongue, and the boy was an apt copyist; albeit he had no notion of the value of words. This was curious, because, for generations and generations, words had been things to his people. He turned up his books and abused it as the French peasantry abused the aristocracy before the Revolution; then he abused it in the Ciceronian style, beginning:—
"Quousque tandem," &c.; then he cursed it in the Swiftian manner, which was rather more vitriolic than the others; then he pulverised it on paper in Macaulay periods, and, when he was nearly exhausted, a cynical Fate put the Pall Mall Gazette and some American papers in his way. He copied everything, and made no doubt but that he was doing well; and the cry of his torment, for he was nearly dead with the terrible indigestion of half-bolted studies, was heartrending. But over and above, and through and under, the Swiftian terrible indigestion of half-bolted studies, was heartrending. But over and above, and through and under, the Swiftian, Ciceronian, and Steadish invective could be heard the winged words of the "bazaars" in which he had been brought up. It was a pitiful, a pathetic thing; and the worst of it was that the boy did not know what was the matter with him, any more than does a baby suffering from colic. To its external credit, be it written, the Government of India did not add a fresh mistake to its original sin. Any other Government on hearing the language the boy used would have imprisoned him. One Government would have hanged him as high as Haman. The Indian Government felt dimly that it had done him a great wrong, and appointed a Commission to soothe him. But his trouble was not curable by Commissions, though he himself said it was. He had mixed up the proverbs about he himself said it was. He had mixed up the proverbs about climbing over other men's shoulders to employment, with Smiles on Self-Help and the curious teachings he had learnt at his mother's knee. He drank, so to speak, brandy and curds, heady port and arrack, together, and the natural indigestive result was extreme discomfort. Then, said the Government of Talling Section 1988. ment of India, who had been lavishing lakhs and lakhs and lakhs on subsistence allowances in order to make him what he was:—"He is irreverent! We must seriously consider the matter. His language is really shocking." And so it was!

The Conference of the Secretaries held itself, and unanimously resolved that Morality was what he lacked. The boy had three hundred and thirty-three million, three hundred and thirty-three thousand, three hundred and thirty-three Gods of nis own; but the Secretaries thought that he might endure yet one more—a colourless and abstract sort of God, carefully arranged so as not to hurt his religious feelings. When they were all settled down, the Military Secretary drifted in, booted and spurred, on his way to the racecourse. "Irreverence is it" said he. "Morality be dashed. When I did anything wrong at school I was flogged to bring me to my bearings, and so were you." He departed tempestuously, while the Secretary murranged. you." He departed tempestuously, while the Secretary murmured:—"You can't flog a married man—boy—what is it?" A Lieutenant-Governor said:—"Hang it, no, they'd make a Dacca schoolboy's case out of it!" And that was the stumbling block. The boy was not only a married man, but also claimed to be the people of the country. In England, a future Prime Minister can be birched till he bleeds and no one says anything. In India, a future anybody cannot be touched with a superior of the country of the cou anything. In India, a future anybody cannot be touched without serious discussion; and this, too, is the fault of the Government of India. "Make prefects," said a Secretary. "No end of good in prefects I was a prefect once." Another Secretary exploded with a crackle and said:—"They'd take bribes." But the recommendation was written down. Then a brilliant genius said:—"Give 'em a primer to teach 'em Morality," and Lord Cross, seven thousand miles away in a London fog, and all among the Societies for the Propagation of Christian Know-ledge, the Protection of Aborigines, the Lying-in Hospitals, and the Missions to fallen women, sent some sample primers and the hissions to faller women, sent sample primers across the sea to the boys who was, on one side, as old as all Asia, as wise as all Asia, and, on the other, younger than the youngest puppy that was ever born, dying of indigestion in the spirit, and dead in the flesh before his fiftieth year. He the spirit, and dead in the flesh before his fiftieth year. He knew rather more about Morality than any of his examiners, for many, many years ago, his forefathers had walked through Morality and come out on the other side. His complaint was indigestion—acute mental dyspepsia, and for that the Government of India gave him a fresh book to swallow.

Just as the Great Morality Manifesto had been drafted, the Secretary in the Revenue and Agriculture Department entered. He had lost his way to his office in a fit of absence of mind, and there was the light of deep thought in his far-away eyes. "Oh! you here!" said he. "By the way, what's the best thing for a cow that has gorged herself with clover?" The question had nothing to do with the Educational Department, and it remained for the Military Secretary, fresh from his morning gallop, to answer it. "You can't do anything,' he said, "but if she recovers, keep her on dry diet."

she recovers, keep her on dry diet."

The Great Morality Manifests went forth to the World. And the World laughed.

THE CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL BILL. (Englishman.)

The preliminary report of the Select Committee on the Calcutta Municipal Bill will be published and circulated in order that the opinions of the Chambers of Commerce and other public bodies may be obtained. The report, of course, embodies the sense of the majority of the committee, but there bodies the sense of the majority of the committee, but there are several points, we understand, upon which the committee is not quite in agreement. Dealing with only the first portion of the Bill the report covers the question of constitution, of consolidate assessment, of plural voting, and of the educational or fancy franchise. On all these questions the public, we think, have arrived at a very clear opinion. They think that the sing of the Corporation are due to its unwight size. half the sins of the Corporation are due to its unwieldy size. They are opposed to any consolidation of rates that does not help to lighten the burden of the tenant, which at present is out of proportion to that of the landlord. Equally, in the case of the plural vote, the question is one of tenant versus landlord, net of Natives as opposed to Europeans, and the only satisfactory settlement of the matter is one that will. beyond all doubt, prevent the landlord from acquiring an overbeyond all doubt, prevent the landlord from acquiring an over-wholming share of electoral power. In regard to this question it may be said that a practice has been allowed to grow up whereby members of joint Hindu families are allowed to exer-cise the plural vote. Europeans living in the same house, or jointly occupying the same business premises, have not enjoyed this privilege, and, in so far as the present proposal will equalise matters in this respect, it is to be commended. But, while it is desirable that wealth should be allowed its due influence, the closest scrutiny should be directed to any pro-noval to readjust the electorial power for the purpose of influence, the closest scrutiny should be directed to any proposal to readjust the electorial power for the purpose of securing this end, seeing that wealth, in this local sense, means to a large extent landlordism, which already possesses an excessive amount of power. As for the educational franchise it is really difficult to speak of the proposal with patience. To give municipal votes to non-ratepaying graduates is an idea hat could only originate in the Bengali mind, dominated as it is by the commercial desire to turn to some purpose of gain the paltry education it is obliged to suffer. The public will be curious to know whether are the committee besides the Native member supported this extraordinary proposal.

VOLUNTEERS IN INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

It is often complained that Volunteers in India get the coldest of cold shoulders from the "Regular Army," who do coldest of cold shoulders from the "Regular Army," who do not perhaps fully realise the self-sacrifice which is involved before the capitation grant can be gained. The Government, it is true, are loud in praise of volunteering, and encourage it among their servants. Individual inspecting officers are at times moved to express their appreciation of the efficiency of particular corps, but, taken all round, there is a sad lack of interest among the army in India regarding volunteers and their work. This is no new complaint, it is almost as old as the movement itself, though officers still living remember what splendid service scratch bodies of Volunteers did in the Mutiny. But, luckily, we have not a common danger always But, luckily, we have not a common danger always at hand to draw men to each other, and in the piping times of peace other means must be found of bringing the two services closer together. In the Presidency District General Purvis has during the past two or three weeks quite won the hearts of the Volunteers by allowing their artillery to fire important salutes, an innovation which may make many an old gunner turn in his grave. But General Purvis belongs to the "Royal Regiment" himself, and he is not likely to have made so novel a departure without good cause. On the New Year Parade at Calcutta the Volunteer Artillery fired the salute under the eye of the Commander-in-Chief, and his Excellency was not slow to show his satisfaction with the manner in which the guns were handled. These may be small matters after all, but they are none the less welcome to Volunteers, who usually feel themselves left out in the cold save on two or three parades in the year. The Calcutta Volunteer Naval Artillery are said to be bent upon doubling their strength by next New Year's Day. They are as smart a body of men as could be wished, and could really take their place with credit side by side with the genuine salt, who occasionally finds himself one

The returns of the rail-borne trade of the Bombay Presi-The returns of the rail-borne trade of the Bombay Presidency for the third quarter of the present year by no means bear testimony to a time of commercial activity. Comparisions with the previous quarter are, of course, misleading, for the through carrying trade being largely dependent upon the grain and cotton harvests is, as everyone knows, very unequally distributed over the year. When the comparison is made with the third quarter of 1886 a falling off from fourteen crores of meaning the distribution. to ten and a quarter crores of maunds is shown, the diminution being mainly in imports from external blocks. It was most serious in wheat, the quantity carried falling off from over three millions of maunds in the September quarter of 1886 to about three quarters of a million maunds this year. Raw about three-quarters of a million maunds this year. Raw cotton showing a decrease of fifty thousand maunds: food grains other than wheat of 338,000 maunds: and oil seeds of about 400,000 maunds. The falling-off in wheat was from all the "external blocks" into which the wheat-producing area which the exports through Bombay is divided, viz., the Punjab, Rajputana and Central India, the North-West Provinces, the Central Provinces (here the falling off was the greatest Rajputana coming next and then off was the greatest, Rajputana coming next, and then the Punjab), Berar, the Nizam's territory and Madras. Almost equally general was the falling off in the seed imports, the only block which did not show a diminution having been Madras. To complete the story told by these naving been Madras. To complete the story told by these returns we now need a statement of the earnings of the railway companies which bring produce to Bombay. The traffic returns for the second half of the year have been persistently unsatisfactory, and the statement which the Examiner of Guaranteed Railway Accounts has just issued, does not look like the forerunner of a report of good earnings and large dividends.

THE CONGRESSIONAL IDEA. (Indian Spectator.)

The Third Indian Congress is now a matter of history. avails little practically to criticise its proceedings or to go into raptures over them. We leave that to those who have better opportunities than ourselves. But the Congressional idea has become sufficiently tough, we believe, to bear a little friendly advice for the future. We think the Congress has passed its advice for the future. We think the Congress has passed its experimental or academic stage. It must now aim at practical results. The promoters need not trouble themselves so much about the number as about the quality of the delegates. If at Allahabad they get together about fifty working representatives for the whole country, with ten or fifteen specialists, and if these latter draw up and discuss a thoroughly practical programme, and the former undertake to see it through during the next year, and to render an account of the year's work in their respective centres when the Congress meets again, at the same time strengthening the hands of our friends in and out of Parliament, they will vindicate its existence much better and do much more solid good than at present. The attendance of members may be as large as the promoters wish, and they may enjoy the power of voting too. But they must have a body of specialists to lead discussion of special subjects of importance, and a body of workers to utilise the results of such intelligent practical discussion. We know how the Congress suffers for want of specialists. For instance, at Madras they had not a word of protest against the huge military expenditure of the country, while they branched off to minor topics scarcely worthy of a National Assembly. And how the position of the Congress is needlessly lowered even among friends, owing to the absence of activity throughout the year to give effect to the Resolutions passed during its session, is equally known. Surely we ought not not to incur this blame in future. The views we have taken the liberty of briefly indicating above are shared by some of our most thoughtful friends here and in England. They have also occurred, we doubt not, to the promoters of the Congress. And if these latter have not yet put them into practice, we can understand the difficulty of their position. But a beginning has to be made, and this will be not very difficult since every succeeding Congress has been an improvement on its predecessor.

GRIEVANCES OF WARRANT OFFICERS. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

It is needless to say that we sympathise heartily with the only class of men in Her Majesty's Service whose position has not been improved during the last twenty years. If others had remained stationary, it would have been easier for them to bear; but when, as is the case, the officers, Warrant officers, and men of the British Army have all had their pay increased by about 50 per cent. and have received other privileges, the position becomes intoleraby unjust. We are glad, therefore, to see that the Indian Warrant officers have collected into pamphlet form a few of the many letters and articles which have appeared in our own columns, as well as in the Pioneer, the Times of India, and the Madras Mail, in the hope of attracting attention to their hardships. As is truly stated in the introduction, the Indian Warrant officer is the "Nobody's child" of the service. He plods along from year to year with no better prospect before him than serving the best of his days in India on pay insufficient to keep himself and family respectable. He draws actually less pay than his juniors in rank, and enjoys none of the privileges conferred upon the latter. Compared with others his advantages are nil; and his only privilege that of paying out of his own pocket what the others receive gratis from Government. We have no doubt that the military authorities in India take a right view of the matter and have duly represented these unanswerable facts at home. But it is not enough that an injustice should be palpable as daylight and admitted by all in this country to procure remedy; else the soldiers who have been defrauded of the "free pardon" promised them on Jubilee Day would not also be waiting with the deferred hope which sickens the heart. There is hope, nevertheless, for both; for even the Unjust Judge surrendered to importunity what he denied to justice and mercy. The Indian Warrant officers have therefore done well in this their latest effort; and we hope and wish that every English newspapers, on receiving a copy of the pamphl

MAJOR DEANE, Officiating Director of Army Remount Operations, has been making an extended official tour. When last heard of he was at Oosoor. Thence he goes to Madras, returning to Calcutta by Allahabad towards the end of the month.

FURTHER accommodation is being made at Howrah for the storing and handling of export produce. A new shed, a thousand feet long, is being built. The Englishman says that, when completed, it will afford storage rooms for 3,000 tons of grain, and this, with the accommodation previously provided, will enable the railway authorities to store no less than 23,000 tons of produce at Howrah during the coming season. It is confidently anticipated that the new storage shed will be finished by the end of March, or in sufficient time to afford sensible relief during the invariably overcharged months of the shipping season—April, May, and June. A further improvement is being made on the railway premises at the salt golahs, lying to the north of Howrah Bridge.

The exports of Indian tea from Calcutta are rapidly and steadily increasing. During the season from May 1 to Dec. 31, 1885, the total exports amounted to 57,212,946 pounds; in 1886 they had increased to 65,676,598 pounds; while in the present year they amount to 75,369,984 pounds. An increase of 9½ million pounds in a single season is a conclusive answer to those who are sceptical of the great future of the industry. With the knowledge of such an improvement, we can afford to take a liberal view of the tea trade of Ceylon, which, comparatively trifling though it is, is also going forward with leaps and bounds. Up to the close of December last, Ceylon had exported upwards of three million pounds of this season's teas, whereas four years ago the export only amounted to 275,849 pounds. When compared with the dismal reports that come from China, these results are extremely satisfactory, and ought to put heart into all connected with this great Indian industry.

An extraordinary incident in a game at whist, the only bond fide one of the kind recorded, occurred at the United Service Club, Calcutta, a few days ago. The players were Mr. Justice Norris, Dr. Harvey, Dr. Sanders, and Dr. Reeves. Two new packs were opened, and were trayed and shuffled in the usual way. Dr. Sanders had one of the packs cut to him, and proceeded to deal. He turned up the knave of clubs, and on sorting his hand found that he had the other twelve trumps. The fact was duly recorded in writing; the odds against this combination are, according to whist authorities, 158,750,000,000

The Khyber Maliks before leaving Calcutta were entertained by the Nawab Abdul Latif. Among those who were present were the leading Mahomedans of Calcutta, including several members of the Oudh and Mysore families. The Nawab, in the course of his speech, expressed the pleasure the Mahomedans of Calcutta had in welcoming the Maliks. He dwelt upon the advantage of British rule, one of the outcomes of which was the construction of railways, which alone had made their visit possible. He remarked that there were five crores or fifty millions of Mahomedans in India, whilst in the whole world the Mahomedan population was 180 millions. According to this calculation, about one-third of this population inhabit India. There were not so many Mahomedans either in Turkey, Persia, Turkistan, Afghanistan, Arabia, China, or Africa. The Mahomedans in India performed their religious rites, and sacred duties, and observances of their faith with comfort, case and complete freedom, without the slightest let or hindrance; and for this, if for no other reason, they were heartly thankful to Her Imperial Majesty the Queen of England and Empress of India, who was sovereign of the largest number of Mahomedans in the whole world. He was sure that the Maliks, being followers of the same faith, must be pleased to see the freedom of worship and religious institutions enjoyed by their correligionists here in peace and comfort in everyday life. The reply by the spokesman of the Maliks was frank and characteristic. It was as follows:—"Nawab Sahib,—We are highly thankful to you and to the Princes and other gentlemen whom we have met here to-night for the kindness and attention which you have shown to us; and if you ever visit our Navive land we shall try to do our utmost to attend to your comforts there; and on our return home we shall relate to our people the kindness, fellow-feeling, hospitality and generosity shown and the honour done to us by our Mahomedan brethren in this great city."

Almost invariably when his High-Highness is roused to self-assertion in public affairs there is a sound purpose behind him. Enough is known of Abdul Huk as a clever, intriguing, not too scrupulous man to forbid our taking his brother, of whom much less is known, on trust. His influence is one that it seems undesirable in the interests of the State should be extended; nor does the fact that a close alliance exists between the Nizam's private secretary and the Minister in question prove anything more than that the appointment of a secretary may not be an unalloyed gain.

In the last Hyderabad Jarida there is a notification from Nawab Muktadir Jung, the Subedar of the Western Division, which states that in view of his great interest in the improvement of the breed of cattle in his Highness the Nizam's Dominions, he has obtained sanction for the holding of a great horse fair at Patan, in the Zilla of Aurungabad. It will be held yearly, on the lines on which that at Mallegaum is established, from the 21st of Farvardi to the 5th of Ardibihast. This period was taken advantage of because at that time there will be a great Hindu jatra also held in the neighbourhood of that village, and as people come from far and near to attend it they will be able to derive both spiritual and temporal profit at one and the same time. There will also be prizes for the best animals exhibited. The occasion will doubtless be largely availed of by wealthy gentlemen in the city and station to obtain good animals, which at present are hardly to be met obtain good animals, which at present are hardly to be met with at any price.

MY LIFE AND BALLOON EXPERIENCES.*

There must be something wonderfully enticing about "Bal-There must be something wonderfully enticing about "Ballooning," otherwise why should men from time to time risk their lives in vain and futile attempts to achieve impossibilities in the air? Why should the terrors of death have no horrors for those who "do and dare" amidst the clouds? And assuredly Mr. Coxwell is no exception to the rule. His parents originally intended that he should enter the army, but circumstances intervened which changed their views, and he had to go into a mercantile office. But from his earliest youth he had dreamed dreams as to agrial payigntion. From seventeen to twenty he dreams as to aërial navigation. From seventeen to twenty he had witnessed all the ascents made in or near London, so that when in due course he started as a dentist all his time for recreation was spent "ballooning." Of course, in such circumstances, "men's teeth" went their own wicked way. But what was Mr. Coxwell's loss is the reader's gain; for scene what was Mr. Coxwell's loss is the reader's gain; for scene after scene of thrilling adventure, danger after danger, escape after escape, triumph after triumph, failure after failure, pass in rapid succession in the pages of the volume which the aerial voyageur has given to the world.

Peril! Why an ordinary citizen of the world scarce knows the meaning of the word when balloon experiences are placed in the scale. Dangers of land, dangers of sea, dangers of flood, dangers of fire, all pale before dangers of the air; and what gorgeous, what superb, sights must have met Mr. Coxwell's eyes as he sailed majestically through the realms of space!—clouds, meteors, mists, mountains, oceans, plains, all combined to lend an air of charm to this most adventurous of pastimes. pastimes.

Will it be ever ought but a pastime? Will the time, sooner or later, arrive when the public travel in balloons just as in trains? Will the horrors of war be increased by efforts from above? Can annihilation be dropped from the clouds, and poor feeble man struggle in vain against aid from the standpoint of the gods? Who shall say? But, be this as it may, none will read Mr. Coxwell's balloon experiences without pleasurable emotion; and, perchance, information will be gleaned in regard to a subject anent which the public are none too well-informed. too well-informed.

MORE T LEAVES.+

This book deals largely—indeed, well-nigh exclusively—with the comic side of existence. All the ordinary events of every-day life are treated in a light, flippant style, so as to create amusement and raise a laugh. Now a few pages proclaim the pleasures of sailing in a tug-boat on the Thames, with one's legs cramped into a hole, seatless and small, with the boom knocking first one side of the head, then the other; with the sheets gibing, and the craft doing anything and everything sheets gibing, and the craft doing anything and everything but what should be. Now a chapter reveals the astounding delights of house-moving, with all the concomitant charms of new carpets, new blinds, new tables, new chairs, new rugs, new—well, new everything. At another there are depicted the adventures of "an old bloke at cricket," and the reader is told how balls will go wide, how "daisy cutters" are cut every time for "fours;" how, when fielding, balls rattle around the venerable patriarch, as if the history of the Storming of the

Redan were repeating itself

And the most ordinary and common occurrences of life afford a peg whereon to hang an endless array of amusing comicalities. Lunching at a refreshment bar, breakfast in bed, a river picmic, a call at a dentist's, a morning walk, a visit to the barber, 'Thames fishing, sitting up late, each and all do duty, and do iit well. The humour is quaintly quaint, the fun is uproarious but dry, the allusions are comical rather than broad—persons must laugh; there is absolutely no help for it. The work is, it may be presumed, primarily designed for "penny readings," and in this direction nothing is left to be desired; but it may also well be perused by the many, who love a laugh, and enjoy good, honest, wholesome mirth. Mr. Turner is what æsthetic ladies would term a "dear darling," differing in this respect from the "T Leaves" which he has placed before the public, for they are quite the reverse of "dear"—in fact, they are as cheap as the original article from which they derive their name.

We have written in this strain because it is difficult to be so date when reviewing pages which scorn a virtue so opposed to the object and aim with which they are prepared; but we do feel that a word of very sober commendation is due to a masterly idea carried out in a masterly fashior. a peg whereon to hang an endless array of amusing comicalities.

BANDOBAST AND KHABAR.*

Colonel Larking in his modest preface deprecates the assumption that "Bandobast and Khabar" contains any fresh information "about the people, customs, and sport of India." Threshed out as his subject has been by every "globe-trotter" who thinks he, and he alone, is able to enlighten the British public on subjects about which, in fact, he knows little or nothing, it may be in some measure true that the work before us adds not much to our stock of information. Yet it is an eminently readable account of a singularly interesting tour; for it makes the mouth of the snortsman water to read of a bag for it makes the mouth of the sportsman water to read of a bag of thirteen tigers, one panther, and a bear, all shot in the space of a few weeks! And surely to gather how it all happened cannot be otherwise than exciting.

But there are many little pieces of information scattered about promiscuously which are likely to be news to the ordinary reader. Take at random a few instances. In India all nary reader. Take at random a few instances. In India all the railways keep Madras time, which is half-an-hour earlier than its confrère at Bombay. Imagine what this means. Picture all the troubles and difficulties which must arise owing to persons being late at the stations! Verily the project to have synchronous time all over the world has something to recommend it. Again, not everyone knows that in the East a traveller always carries his own bedding—so much so that in the best houses nothing in this direction is surplied beyond a the best houses nothing in this direction is supplied beyond a mattress and pillow. The majority of plants and shrubs, we are told, are in pots, for the simple reason that in the hot season and the times of heavy rain during the monsoon they are removed to places of shelter. Trees are leafless in the hot weather, and burst out again during the cold season. Stations on the various lines always have dressing-rooms for the convenience of reconcern who are provided to have the convenience of passengers who are anxious to have a change of apparel and a general "wash up" after a journey of change of apparel and a general "wash up" after a journey of some hours under a tropical sun.

It were easy to multiply instances of this description. Colonel Larking hopes his experience may induce others to "do likewise." He seems, however, to forget that it is not the fate of everyone who plays a flying visit to India to appear under such favourable auspices. It is not the happy "qismat" of all travellers to have battues organised by a State on a stately scale just to do honour to the "burra sahib;" but those who can command such luxuries will do well to take hints from Colonel Larking's perplexities; while the humble few, if they cannot themselves expect such privileges, may at least shares the pleasures of companionship with a most charming "Shikar" in the person of the most unpretentious author of the popular and pretty "Bandobast and Khabar."

HANDEL.+

The idea of placing before the public a series of biographies of the great composers in a cheap, and therefore accessible form is happy, and if the first volume be indicative of the merit of its successors, the venture should be successful. Who does not know Handel's music? But how many who listen to the "Messiah" or the "Israel of Egypt" are aware even in outline as to the composer's life? Could most people even tell that he was a foreigner, and only settled in England because of the friendly reception which his earlier works obtained? True, a residence of fifty years in the country, and a burial in West-minster Abbey did, in a way, make Handel "of the Englishers English," but Germany can claim him as her own—"her very own son." Once again could the ordinary amateur assert without fear of contradiction that the immortal author of the "Messiah" composed, besides the twenty-one oratories, forty-three operas, twenty anthems, five Te Deums, five psalms, four odes, as well as cantatas, odes, concerted pieces, not by tens or twenties, but by hundreds! This and a great deal more the reader will find in Mr. Hadden's most instructive little brochure, of which it will effect on the tribulation of the contraction of the c which it will suffice to say that it is simple yet dignified, unpretentious yet replete with information, critical yet deviod of bias. Its motto is, or should be, multum in parvo.

MORE THAN HE BARGAINED FOR.*
The chief merit in "More than he Bargained For" is the light which it throws upon India and Indian life. Evidently Mr. Hutchinson has had personal experience of the land of the Sun. He could not else have depicted the petty jealousies, the paltry spites, the unseemly struggles for precedence, the pious debaucheries of sinning society, the attempts at "playing the devil at pleasure," and the thousand and one lives which are comprised in the catalogue raisonnée of this plain-speaking novel. But we venture to assert that such a character as Tom Flinn rather appertains to the past than the present. Indian society is, perhaps, none too particular in many ways, and that in some out-of-the-way up-country stations where public opinion is powerless—there being no public in the case—it is possible that gay young backelors indulge in the costly luxury of a harem, enlivened at times with the witching dancing of bewitching nautch girls and the indescribable revels of unrestrained freedom; but such instances are comparatively few and far between. It would be as unfair to judge of India at large by the isolated vagaries of one or two harum-scarum rakes as it would to condemn all Members of Parliament because one or two amongst the number love to sacrifice good sense upon the altar of notoriety, and gain a transitory renown at the shrine of Trafalgar-square.

But, be this as it may, Mr. Hutchinson is a powerful, albeit unequal writer. Some of his scenes are graphic in the extreme, while others scarcely rise above the level of bare mediocrity. The tale is an embodiment of passion and vice relieved at times with discovirious on some of the mediane. mediocrity. The tale is an embodiment of passion and vice, relieved at times with disquisitions on some of the problems of Indian life; but, en passant, does the author fancy that such a difficult question as "Salt" can be adequately settled by a few bitter and biassed pages in a work of fiction? It will doubtless be deemed satisfactory that in the end virtue gains the day and vice gets "more than was bargained for." This is a time-honoured custom, and when the curtain drops in the approved fashion who will hesitate to applaud?

THE EASTERN MAILS.—The Postmaster-General (Mr. Raikes), speaking at the anunal dinner of the Wolverhampton Chamber of Commerce, said, with regard to the question of the Indian and China postage, it might at first sight seem an anomaly that the French should be able to send a letter to India for 2½d., while the English, who carried them, had to pay fivepence, but very little consideration would show that that was not the real aspect of the question. The Postal Union, which gave to us the great advantage of sending our letters to other countries in the Postal Union for 2½d. gave to the French the power to send their letters to any British Possession for 2½d. That was a fact which had to be accepted unless this country was disposed to recede from the Postal Union. When they came to the question that the English had to pay 5d, they must remember that we had to support the service. The Frenchman sent his letter for 2½d., and he had a right to do it, but it cost the French Government very little indeed. They had to pay something towards the carriage, but they made a profit out of the 2½d. Her Majesty's Government made anything but a profit out of the 5d., because they had to support the steamers which took the letters, and, not only so, but they had to pay to the French and Italian Governments a sum not very far short of 2d. out of the 5d. for the transit between Calais and Brindisi. With regard to the Eastern mail, by the contract which he was able to conclude with the Peninsular and Oriental Company in the course of last year, the price now THE EASTERN MAILS.—The Postmaster-General (Mr. Raikes), speakmail, by the contract which he was able to conclude with the Peninsular and Oriental Company in the course of last year, the price now paid was £265,000—(cheers)—or a saving of £95,000 per annum. The transit through Egypt had previously cost £12,000 a y-ar, and that had now ceased to exist because the letters were now carried by the mail steamers through the Canal. Therefore the entire saving upon that service was £107,000 a year. In addition to that, under the contract they saved one day in the speed in going to Bombay, and the farther East—(Hear, hear:) In the course of the next year the House of Commons would be asked to extend the saving effected in the Indian and China mail, in making a more perfect and complete service for Australia.

LORD DUFFERIN'S RESIGNATION.

A GREATER surprise could hardly have fallen upon England and India at such a moment as the present than the announcement which was telegraphed a few days ago from Calcutta, that Lord Dufferin had tendered his resignation of his office of Viceroy and Governor-General of India. When he accepted the post, it was rumoured—we know not upon what authority—that he did so upon the understanding that the rule limiting the Viceregal tenure of office to a term of five years would be set aside in his case should he desire to remain longer. He has not yet ruled four years, and he has declared that he has made up his mind to retire, and his successor has been officially nominated.

It is only natural that this sudden intelligence should have given rise to many surmises and speculations in public and private circles. It was difficult to believe that anything except some extraordinary strain in the relationships between the Viceroy and the Home Government could have induced the former to throw up his high office at a time when all India, European and Native, regarded him as the strong ruler to whom at a critical time had been committed the destinies of the Empire, and whose guidance all men accepted as a guarantee for present security and increasing prosperity. His career in India has already been marked by much important work, in which very serious issues had to be promptly decided. His predecessor left him no bed of Oriental roses to repose upon, notwithstanding the influence which sentimentalism and philanthropy was supposed to exercise upon the Oriental character. Lord Dufferin did not realise much benefit from the very excellent intentions which Lord Ripon had laid down in India. He had, on the contrary, to meet some very unpleasant facts and some very considerable difficulties. As the Times tersely puts it :-

He was within a short distance of having to undertake a war with Russia, which might have developed into a war for the possession of India, after the "unfortunate incident" of Penjdeh. That war was happily avoided; but under the stress of imminent danger the army of India was increased, and large measures for the defence of the north-west frontier were carried through by the Viceroy and by Sir Frederick Roberts. He decided that Upper Burma must be reduced to order, and within an incredibly short space of time the British soldiers were in Mandalay. The process of pacifying and settling Burma has not, as everyone knows, been so swift and complete as Lord Dufferin himself had hoped. But a country as large as France is not settled in a year, and with all the drawbacks it must be admitted that the annexation has been on the whole well conducted, and that a province of enormous value has been added to the British Empire. Nor have the internal problems of government with which Lord Dufferin has had to deal been insignificant or easy. With all the help that a Viceroy receives from his Legislative Council, it is necessary that his must be the guiding hand, and with a Viceroy like Lord Dufferin it need hardly be said that this has been eminently the case. On all the multitude of great and important questions which arise in that vast Empire of 250 millions he must be ready to turn his eye; and with the chief of them he deals far more directly than does a constitutional King. Lord Dufferin has had to untie or to cut the knot of many most difficult problems.

But in the midst of all this great and good work, for the accomplishment of which his brain and hand were somuch needed, Lord Dufferin has found it imperative upon him to resign. After the assurance which he has given himself, that private and domestic reasons only have forced him to take that step, no words can, of course, be becoming but expressions of regret. In him India will lose a ruler who had more than any of his predecessors, except Lord Mayo, succeeded in gaining over the goodwill of the people, and the confidence of the Native chiefs and princes. But he resigns at a time when the present is calm and the future hopeful. "He will leave India," as a contemporary yesterday said, "not only strong so far as frontier defences and strategic railways combine tostrengthen her from outward foes, but he will leave havingbuilt up a stronger rampart within her borders in the loyalty and goodwill towards English rule which he has evoked, and made steady in the hearts of the peoples and their chiefs.

SIR HENRY MAINE.

It was only to be expected that the announcement of the death of Sir Henry Maine would bring to us, as a representative journal of Indian past and current history, more than one graceful tribute in memory of a man with whose name so many Indian associations have been linked for years past. But the brilliant and exhaustive memoir which has appeared in the Times, and the touching notice by a loving hand, easily recognised, which the Saturday Review has given to its readers, leave little new to be said regarding the career of the gifted scholar, thinker, and legislatorwhose untimely death has created a blank in the intellectual world. It has been said that the influence of Sir Henry Maine on the thought of his time has been second only to that of Darwin; but, granting that there has been no exaggeration in the estimate which his friends formed of his marvellously lucid and profound intellect, this is a verdict which only posterity can decide. Here we are more concerned with the work he did in India, and afterwards for India, in the Secretary of State's Council. Although, as Legislative Member of the Council of the Viceroy, it was said of him that he was more inclined to study the problems of Indian life and customs from books than from the experience of practical workers—that he, in fact, theorised rather than took occasion by the hand-it must be remembered that he was the trusted counsellor of John Lawrence, whom no one can accuse of placing theories before hard facts. But it has been hinted also that in the India Council, great as his influence was it would have been greater had he been more of a man of action than of words. His success in that Council was thought by some not to have been commensurate with his intellectual power or with his reputation as a scholar, a philosopher, and a lawyer. This supposed defect was attributed to that want of promptitude in coming to fixed conclusions which is called indecision of character. It may be, however, that what appeared to be irresolution was only an earnest desire to do justice to all -a nervous fear of doing wrong, even with the best intention. He may have been over cautious, and over caution has been known to have weakened the influence of the most splendid and acknowledged abilities. His health, too, was for a long time indifferent, and the strain of multifarious labours told heavily upon him. Indeed, some time before his death it was known that his desire was to retire altogether from public life.

The charm of his private character, his unselfish devotion to official duty, and the influence of his writings are not, however, likely soon to be forgotten.

We hope that the occasion of his death may be taken advantage of for the publication of a complete edition of his works for popular use. These would form in themselves an almost complete library for the political education of the English democracy; and we will conclude the present notice with an enumeration of them, viz., "Roman Law and Legal Education " in the Cambridge Essays for 1856; "Ancient Law," first published in 1861; "Village Communities in the East and West," 1871; "The Early History of Institutions," 1875; "Dissertations on Early Law and Custom," 1883; and "Popular, Government," 1885. In these is his one worthy monument.

THE Radical Star announces as "another good thing" that Lord Dufferin has applied to Lord Salisbury for the Embassy to Rome, and that this has been given to him. Authority not quoted.

THE SALT TAX IN INDIA.

Sir J. Gorst, in answer to a question by Sir R. Fowler, said:—On December 24 the Viceroy reported to the Secretary of State the urgent necessity of strengthening the revenues of India with a view to meeting increased charges under the heads of "Army in Upper Burma," "Frontier Defences," and exchange. The Government of India was unanimous in urging that, in addition to the other measures which it was proposed to take, the salt tax should be raised. This proposal received the most serious attention of the Secretary of State received the most serious attention of the Secretary of State received the most serious attention of the Secretary of State in Council, with a view especially to devise some other means of meeting the increased expenditure than by raising the salt duty. But the Council was unanimous in agreeing with the Government of India on the absolute necessity, in the financial circumstances, of raising the duty; and the Secretary of State was compelled reluctantly to assent to the proposals of the Government of India on January 17. The salt duty has accordingly been raised from two rupees throughout India to two rupees eight annas per maund, while in Burma it has been raised from three annas to a rupee. So far as we have information from India the financial measures taken have been favourably received. favourably received.

Sir R. Fowler asked whether, by an early introduction of the Indian Budget, or in any other way, facilities would be given for the discussion of the subject.

Mr. W. H. Smith said there was a notice of an amendment to the Address on the subject, and that would afford an opportunity.

"ODIUM CUM DIGNITATE."

Awake, fellow-citizens wake! Good name and repute are at stake! Shall we suffer this slur on our race, Shall we pocket this patent disgrace, Shall we go to the Banqueting Hall To that which they scornfully call A Dignity Ball?

A vile and opprobrious name! I scarce can inscribe it for shame:
A term that West Indian nigs
Apply to their breakdowns and jigs.
The pleasure would pall,
And one's status would fall If one danced at a Dignity Ball. Yet Jawkins is going, and Snooks,
Just to see how the gathering looks.
My name from the papers next day
Would be absent if I stayed away.
Oh! wormwood and gall! to read of it all,
And not to have been, on the birth of the Queen
To the Dignity Dignity Ball.

Then wormwood and gall let it be, I stand on my own dignitee; No Port Royal Sambo am I With shirt-collar half a yard high A base-minded African thrall. Shall I like a recreant crawl, Smiling Benignity unto their Dignity Vilest indignity Ball?

Yet Jawkins and Snooks will be there: My wife has new garments to wear; And if I should fail to attend, Next year would they trouble to send
A card to invite me to maul
The charming collation, that blest consummation
That crowns a good Dignity Ball!

Then what's in a fanciful name? In Dignity where is the shame
Is hall go with the rest, and e'en smile at the jest
At the Banqueting Hall,
On the night of the Dignity,
Hang their malignity!

TRAVELLING IN CENTRAL ASIA.

At a meeting of the Paris Geographical Society M. Bonvalot gave an account of a journey made by himself and his companions, M. Capus and M. Pópin, through Central Asia. The chair was taken by M. Ferdinand de Lesseps, who congratulated the explorers on the success of their expedition, and gave a brief account of other modern journeys in the same region. M. Bonvalot gave a very lively and amusing account of his journey. Finding it impossible to reach India from Samarcand through Afghanistan, he resolved to cross the Pamir tableland in winter. They were told that the rarefaction of the air, the vast extent of the snow-fields to be crossed, their great height, the excessive cold, and the fatigue of the journey would cause certain death. General Karatkoff alone encouraged them to proceed. Their inducement 'to make the journey in winter was that the country is then free from the nomadic robbers who infest it at other seasons. They were enveloped in successive folds of felt, leather, and sheepskins, which covered all parts of the body, but especially the hands, feet, mouth, and nose. They were even more bulky than divers equipped for work, but bore a close resemblance to them. An open breathing-space was left in front of the eyes, which were, however, protected by convex non-magnifying glasses. On March 6 they left for Ak Basogan and the pass of Taldik. On the 13th they found the temperature to be minus eighteen degrees Fahrenheit at nine P.M. For three days 200 natives were engaged in opening a path through the snow of the Taldik Pass for the caravan of the travellers, which consisted of twenty-four saddle-horses and thirty laden with provisions and fuel. The sufferings of the party were dreadful. Their lips were chapped, their noses bled, they breathed with difficulty, they had tevere headaches, and they felt exhausted. March 18 and 19 were lays of great suffering. The thermometer stood at minus thirty-six degrees Fahrenheit. Several horses died of cold, others disappeared in holes. On t

The Afchan Boundary Commission.—Captain Manifold, R.A., read a paper on Friday evening before the Indian Section of the Society of Arts on "The Work of the Afghan Boundary Commission." Mr. J. M. Maclean, M.P., presided, and there were also present Sir Frederick Goldsmid, General Walker, and Major Holdich.—In the opening portion of his paper, Captain Manifold gave a lengthy recapitulation of the chief phases of the Anglo-Russian question as affecting the work of the Boundary Commission, to the earlier history of which he also alluded, proceeding afterwards to describe in detail the actual results of the undertaking which was brought to a conclusion by Sir West Ridgeway last July. By the treaty thus concluded the Afghans ceded 100 square miles of territory more than they received; but as the land gained had a population of 13,000 persons with a revenue of £1,400 per annum, whereas the district ceded by them was nearly all waste land, the gain was decidedly with Afghanistan. The lecturer next explained the nature and resources of the country adjoining the frontier line, and showed how the opening of the railway to Quetta and beyond the Khojah Amran range had strengthened the British position. Turning to the general results of the work effected by the commission, Captain Manifold pointed out the marked improvement in the relations between ourselves and the Afghan people, contrasting the position of affairs to-day, when English officers, with the permission of the ruler, could live and travel safely in the country, with that of nine years ago, when Sir Louis Cavagnari and his escort were massacred in Cabul. The people of Afghanistan understood us now far better than formerly, though they might still have a national mistrust of the British Government, engendered by long years of change and unrest. The demarcation of the frontier, said the lecturer, in conclusion, by placing a patent obstacle in front of Russia, which could only mistrust of the British Government, engendered by long years of change and unrest. The demarcation of the frontier, said the lecturer, in conclusion, by placing a patent obstacle in front of Russia, which could only be removed by a clear breach of faith with England, had greatly increased our prestige in the eyes of Afghans and Persians. The last pillars of the frontier had now been placed by Colonel Yate and Major Peacocke, and if we allowed Russia to trespass, the fault would be our own. At the conclusion of the lecture a short discussion ensued, and a number of interesting sketches of Afghan scenery made by Major Holdich were handed round for inspection. The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to Mr. Maclean for presiding.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tatesman, October 1886.

.... The best service which I everrandered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athonæum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sone from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy. If the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C. in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.— Westmineter

MANUAL

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

BY

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide; First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics.

Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidlo, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Revisor of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wistes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—Saturday Review.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENEUM.

"The porusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—Daily News.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—Overland Mail.

"The rules and explanations are clear, torse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." TRUBNER'S RECOND.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishors have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done gorg service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a fow—in mastering Arabio are reduced to a minimum."—BOAD ARROW.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PROPER OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing montruly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Poice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian beople.

The Magarine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people naturally dooile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus because the English public are characterised by a zoowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordically, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clube, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS oiginally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Mesers. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prizo Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand moode and filte of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finestBrazilian Diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 3rd February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 1st February; and from Calcutta to the 31st January.

THE Supreme Legislative Council met at Calcutta on January 27th, when the Hon. Mr. Westland took the opportunity of the introduction of the Petroleum Bill to lay bare the financial state of the country in an exhaustive speech.

THE report of the Select Committee on the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Bill was discussed in the Bengal Legislative Council on January 28th, when an amendment against the proposed amalgamation of the town and suburbs was lost, and also another that the number of wards should be reduced.

THE inquiry into Sir Horace Rumboldt's claims against the Hyderabad State has been concluded. It is stated the Minister has recommended his Highness to sanction a payment of Rs. 2,00,000 in full settlement of the claim.

THE MAHARAJAH OF JODHFORE has offered ten lakhs of rupees to the Government of India towards the defence of the North-West frontier.

MR. W. R. PARTRIDGE, Joint Magistrate of Benares, joins the Secretariat of the North-West Provinces in place of Mr. Lovett.

According to a Calcutta paper, Mr. Agabeg has succeeded in finding rich iron ore in quantity, with limestone and coal within easy reach, in his mineral explorations of the Sonthal Parganas.

TRADE in Mandalay is represented by a brewery and a saw-mill, both of which are directly dependent on Government, a hotel, a half-dozen shopkeepers, one or two commercial houses, a printing press or so, a few contractors, and a bank. The rest of the European community is entirely official, Flotilla Company, legal, or loafer.

The most important personage among the Khyber Maliks is Sultan Mohamed Khan, who can muster a force of 5,000 fighting men. Khwar Khan and Ameen Khan can muster the same force; Azam Khan can bring together about 3,000 men; Shere Mohamed Khan, 2,000; Bilal Khan and Feroz Khan, from 2,000 to 3,000.

MR. METCALFE, Commissioner of the Orissa Division, is likely to take furlough shortly, owing to ill-health. Mr. Worsley will officiate.

THE I rigation Committee appointed to inquire into the working of the Sone Canals system have completed their inquiries, and the report is now being compiled.

COLONEL TWEEDIE, Political Resident in Turkish Arabia, is likely to go on furlough before the hot weather sets in.

THE act to amend the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act as far as it relates to matadars, which received the assent of the Viceroy on Jan. 14th, is published in the Government Gazette.

REAR-ADMIRAL RICHARDS, Commander of the Eastern squadron, is expected to arrive in Madras in his flagship Bacchante about the beginning of March. His Excellency will probably put up at Government House during his short stay in Madras.

5 THE Secretary of State has accorded his sanction to the scheme submitted by the Government of Madras for the revision of the existing grades and rates of pay of District Superintendents and Assistant Superintendent of Police in this Presidency.

Colonel Prideaux has presented his report on the affairs of the ex-King of Oudh, and the Government are now considering the allotment of pensions to the family. The title, as should be well known, died with the late King.

Dissension appears to exist in the Brahmo Somaj. An attempt was made to remove Babu P. C. Mozumdar from the pulpit by Babu Cran Krishna Dutt. A scene of confusion followed, but Babu Mozumdar's supporters proved too strong. The congregation broke up, and service was completed in his house.

MR. GIRDLESTONE'S departure has been delayed for a fortnight, owing to Bir Shumshere's proposed visit to Calcutta. Mr. Girdlestone probably meets the Minister at Sagowlie.

THE Government will leave Calcutta this year on the 24th March, the offices reopening at Simla on April 9th.

THE purchase of two iron safes at a cost of Rs. 20,000 for the public treasury of Goa has been commented upon as an instance of wasteful expenditure, since the coffers are found generally empty.

THE news regarding Sikkim has greatly agitated the Babus resident at Darjeeling. A number of them waited on a local officer there the other day to ask his advice whether or not it would be prudent to send their families down to Calcutta "on account of the war."

The Queen's Register, containing in MS. the names of the subscribers to the National Association for Supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India, goes home by the present mail steamer.

ATUB KHAN, on his arrival in India, will receive a similar allowance to that enjoyed by his brother, Yakub Khan.

It is believed that a specially qualified officer of the Punjab Frontier Force will shortly be selected by the Quartermaster-General in India for employment on special duty among the border clans and tribes on the Forth-West Frontier.

COLONEL YATE, telegraphing from Kham-i-Ab on the 15th inst., reports the weather in the Oxus Valley as still warm and fair, but threatening a break. The health of the party was good, and no hitch had occurred in the work of delimitation.

THE marriage of Lord Herbrand Russell with Miss Tribe, daughter of the Archdeacon of Lahore, took place on January 30th at Barrackpore. The ceremony was strictly private, the Rev. F. Orton performing the service, assisted by the father of the bride. Lord William Beresford was best man, and Lady Dufferin gave away the bride. The Viceroy and the members of his family and his Excellency's personal staff were present.

CENTRAL ASIA.—A voluminous Blue-book just published (Central Asia No. 2), contains further correspondence respecting the affairs of Central Asia. The book contains no fewer than 273 despatches, the dates of which range from October 2, 1885, to August 3, 1887. The book deals with the work done by Sir West Ridgeway and the Boundary Commission, and is therefore anterior in date to the Parliamentary paper noticed in the Times of Friday last, which contained the conclusion of the correspondence on the subject.

The Gælic Club, Poona.—"Loyal" writes to the Bombay paper that inquired some days ago as to who constituted the "Gælic Club" at Poona which had remitted £10 to England in support of the Funds of the National League:—"They are chiefly men who took the Queen's shilling and came to India in the army. They are now Government servants, and it is hardly creditable to think that while eating the salt of the British Government, these men will subscribe funds to aid a league whose object is to overthrow the laws of the Crown."

NOTES.

THE official announcement that Lord Dufferin had been appointed to the Embassy at Rome appeared in the Times and the London dailies on Saturday. The Star, however, had already announced the fact—and to which we drew attention—on the Monday previous.

HIS LORDSHIP'S resignation continues, according to the telegram of the Calcutta correspondent of the Times today, to be the chief topic of interest in the Indian Press, which is unanimous, with the exception of certain insignificant Native journals, in its expressions of regret. These journals are said to be the organs of Native agitators, who write in obedience to orders issued from the headquarters of agitation in Calcutta and Bombay. Be this as it may, the influence of these papers is nil, and it is satisfactory to learn that the high-class Hindoo Patriot, the organ of the Bengal landholders, says of Lord Dufferin's administration that it "has given the country a sense of security from outside dangers, while his internal rule has been vigorous, sympathetic, and just."

SUCH criticism is in pleasing contrast to another specimen to which the Pioneer calls attention. A Bengal vernacular paper says:—"To the weak the English are like a tiger—to the strong they are like sheep. They never shrink from committing high-handedness and oppression on the peace-loving people of India, and more particularly on the weak Bengalis. But they become tame as a lamb when there is power and force." This is the prelude to a statement that the English are in fear of the Russians, and that consequently they are strengthening the frontier defences of India by even such doubtful means as realising money from a minor Raja. We agree with our Allahabad contemporary that this must be cheerful reading for those who are day by day proclaiming that the Natives of India, and particularly of Bengal, are well fitted to supersede the Englishmen who are now administering the country, but we do not look upon the criticism in the very same way that the Pioneer does, nor do we think that it was incumbent upon the National Congress to publicly declare its disapproval of it. As the Pioneer owns it to be trash why not let it be treated as trash-with contempt?

To take serious notice of one paragraph would necessitate the taking serious notice of another. A Government with the form of a tiger and the heart of a sheep is not a flattering picture of the British administration in India, but here is another picture drawn by another vernacular print:—

The English are a nation of shopkeepers. They will not take up a business which is unremunerative. They do not shrink from spending money, but their desire for taking is stronger than for giving. To them the acquisition of wealth is everything. They do not consider a religion to be a religion which does not facilitate the earning of money. Along with the preaching of religion they extend commerce. They do not possess what is called disinterestedness and real religion. None of the Western races have these attributes. The English came to India for the purpose of commerce. Now they have become Emperor. But even now they have not forgotten their commercial instincts.

The last sentence might be taken as a compliment; for Englishmen would not like the world to believe that they had forgotten their commercial instincts.

A NATIVE gentleman, however, finds fault with the tone of the English Press in India. He writes to say that the Pioneer, Morning Post, and Civil and Military Gazette are three dailies largely read, but "not liked by the generality of Native gentlemen." But this difficulty, he says, can be removed, and he explains how. "Let a fresh paper be started—a paper more suited to the tist; and habits of Native gentlemen." And then comes this pathetic conclusion, "But capital and enterprise? Ah! there's the

THE letter is written to the Delhi Gazette, which it compliments by saying that "it were a shame to let such an old and respectable paper be swimming against the tide without an effort to extending a helping hand towards it." But it is not one hand, but many, that are invited to aid. "There are hundreds of B.A.'s and M.A.'s in Upper India. Let them contribute to it." After this fearful suggestion the writer adds: "If it be supported by the public, I think the proprietors will have no objection to reduce its price." This is charming; so like Babú.

The bestowal by Her Majesty of a knighthood on Dr. Tyler, of the Agra Jail, has much exercised the temper and pens of some of our contemporaries. One evening paper says:—"Anglo-Indians, official and non-official, will be somewhat surprised to hear that Dr. J. W. Tyler, Superintendent of Agra Jail, is to be knighted for his services in connection with the Colinderies. Dr. Tyler's services consisted in looking after the comfort of the Asiatics employed at the Exhibition, in being civil to Princess Beatrice when she attended to sketch the humble but picturesque subjects of the Queen, and in personally conducting them to Windsor Castle on two or three occasions. Most persons thought he was more than amply rewarded by being made a C.I.E.; what will be said in India when it becomes known there that the favoured doctor is, according to report, to receive the further and higher honour of knighthood? Certainly the intelligence will not remove the unfavourable impression that was created by the partial manner in which the decorations for the Exhibition were distributed."

Another, a Sunday contemporary, refers to the same matter thus:—

Her Majesty's infatuation—for the Royal enthusiasm amounts to nothing less—has been so acute that on more than one occasion the conversation at the Osborne dinner-table has been confined to one topic—"the Doctor"—and, we may add, to one speaker, the Queen herself. As for the guests, except when deference to Majesty demanded expressions of assent, they listened in silence and astonishment. But when the meal was over one of them approached an official of the Court, reputed to have influence with the Sovereign, and asked him why he did not interpose to correct Her Majesty's extravagant ideas as to services rendered to India by Dr. Tyler. "Interpose! She won't listen to a word. He's to be knighted, and there's an end on't." So there is nothing for it but to compliment the Agra-carpet-knight upon his honour, and to hope that he will live up to it.

Some surprise has been occasioned in certain quarters at the nomination of Sir Charles Turner to the Secretary of State for India's Council in the room of the late Sir Henry Maine. It is rumoured, and we give the rumour for what it is worth, that the appointment was made at the express solicitation of the National Congress of India in a telegram from Madras, the Delegates considering that they will have in the ex Chief Justice a representative in intelligent sympathy with their views and aspirations.

THE Government of India migrates early to Simla this year, the last meeting of the Viceregal Council to be held at Calcutta prior to the migration being fixed for March 23rd.

The following fuller particulars regarding the offer made by the Maharajah of Rampur are taken from the Morning Post:—
"We hear that his Highness the Maharajah of Rampur has come to the front as a loyal supporter of the British Government in this country. It appears that so far back as 1885 the father of the present ruler volunteered to bear all the expenses of an efficient infantry regiment, and the present Maharajah has now expressed his wish to abide by this liberal offer, adding that he would like the corps to be known as the 'Rampur Regiment,' and to be managed throughout by British officers. The Viceroy, we learn, has duly and courteously acknowledged this display of loyalty on the part of the Rampur State, but with all this, rumours come to us of many shortcomings in the administration of that part of the country, and it is hoped that at the Lieutenant-Governor's durbar, where the Maharajah will be present, occasion will be taken by Sir Auckland Colvin to impart to this well-meaning Prince some few healthy suggestions towards an improvement in his rule, and the conciliation of those subjected to his government.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 19.

Perhaps no portion of the recent financial debate in the Legislative Council attracted more attention than the remarks of Mr. Evans on the necessity of effecting some reforms in what are known as home charges. They are quoted with approval by almost every newspaper in India, and it is felt intolerable, especially in the present state of financial difficulty, that the Indian Government should be hampered by having to meet heavy and increasing charges which are entirely beyond its control. The short service system arrangements for purchasing Government stores in England impose upon India a burden which she can ill afford to bear, and for which she gets no adequate return. This is a matter on which public opinion is daily becoming stronger and more outspoken, and it is to be hoped that the India Office will take the subject up without delay.

In the Legislative Council on Friday Mr. Westland moved for leave to introduce a Bill to prohibit the making or issue by private persons of pieces of metal for use as money. He explained that there was no intention to make a crusade against what are known as "dumpy pice"—namely, irregularly-shaped pieces of copper which have long been in circulation, and which are almost the only copper coins seen in some districts. Making those "dumpy pice" was not punishable under the penal code. They were not counterfeits of any authorised coin, but although it was not intended at present to prevent their use, it was desirable to stop their further manufacture. This was the mere necessary as it appeared that in some places they were being openly manufactured in large quantities by persons who pretended to have authority from Government, and several applications for licences to make them had actually been presented to various district magistrates. He proposed, therefore, to amend the law so as effectually to prohibit the manufacture and importation of "dumpy pice," and also to declare that they should not be received by any government treasury, railway company, or municipality.

At the same meeting of the Council, Lieut.-General Chesney

At the same meeting of the Council, Lieut.-General Chesney asked leave to bring in a Bill to establish for the Indian forces a reserve system similar to that of England. He said that, although the Indian army was technically a long-service army, it was also a short-service army in so far that many soldiers took their discharge after five to ten years. The reason was that the men being generally agriculturists, and having an interest in family lands, could not conveniently absent themselves for very long periods, but they had military instincts, and it was hoped and believed that reserved pay carrying only a liability for active service on emergencies would attract large numbers to join the reserve. He added that, although the reserve system was introduced a year ago, practically little progress had been made yet, partly owing to the operations in Burma and partly because the Bengal army had been undergoing a small augmentation. The Bill, he said, followed lines similar to the English measure, and set forth the conditions of service in the army reserve.

An important meeting of members of the Uncovenanted Civil Service was held last week for the purpose of discussing and passing resolutions on certain grievances. The list of gentlemen present is a remarkable illustration of how entirely out of date and anomalous is the old principle of drawing a broad line of distinction between the Covenanted Civil Service and all other Government servants. The Directors of Public Instruction presided, while the educational, scientific, financial, telegraph, and other public departments were represented by gentlemen holding high and responsible positions. A series of resolutions was adopted dealing chiefly with the hardships of the present leave and pension rules.

News from the Chittagong frontier reports the safety of the survey party under Lieutenant Baird, which was operating in conjunction with Lieutenant Stewart's party, lately surprised by Lushais. On hearing of Lieutenant Stewart's fate, Lieutenant Baird, with a reinforcement of police from headquarters, started to try and cut off the murderers, but it is believed they will not have much chance of overtaking them. It now appears that Lieutenant Stewart was within the British frontier when attacked.

The Pioneer newspaper mentions a circumstance connected with the two recent cyclonic storms which appears worthy the attention of meteorologists. Those storms struck the Scinde desert between the 24th and 30th of January, and passed in a straight line across the continent to Cuttack at the rate of 250 to 300 miles daily. The second continued unbroken across the Bay of Bengal to Burma. If the line they followed were prolonged straight westward it would reach Vienna, which is about 3,600 miles from Scinde. There seems to have been an unusually violent atmospheric disturbance in Vienna in the early part of January, so the time and the rate of travelling would agree with the assumption that the storms were identical with that disturbance would agree with the assumption that the storms were recovered with that disturbance.

Professor Forrest, of the Bombay Educational Service, who during the last few years has published a useful and interesting series of selections from the early records of the western Presidency, was deputed last month by the Bombay Government to examine the system of the arrangement records prevailing in the public offices in Calcutta. It is understood that during his inquiries in the Foreign Office he discovered a number of unpublished documents which throw new light upon one of the most important periods of the early history of the British Empire in India.

BURMA.

RANGOON, FEB. 18.

The official bulletin for Upper Burma states that in he northern division several encounters with bodies of Dacoits took place during the past week. In the Ruby Mines district a gang of Dacoits had been surprised by the police and had been broken up. Several violent crimes were committed in Mandalay district, and that portion of the district nearest the hills had been harassed by Shan raiders. A body of these raiders was pursued by the Burmese police led by the Burmese Myook. The leader of the marauders was killed, four persons and four guns were captured, and much dacoited property was recovered. On the 15th Boh Yakut was executed at Pouk, in pursuance of the sentence passed on him in two cases for abetting the murder of loyal Thoogyes. The local Government attach considerable importance to Yakut's capture and execution. After Ottama he was the most dangerous Dacoit leader in the southern division. For months past he had mercilessly hunted down officials and other Burmans loyal to the British Government. Yakut spared none who came within his reach.

In the Shwebo district a troop of European infantry and some military police, commanded by Captain Poynder, after a forced night march, attacked Boh Ngashwee's camp at Myohla. Three Dacoits were killed and a quantity of arms was captured. The gang was followed by the troops a short distance, but the Dacoits escaped in the thick jungle. Triscott's column has reached Sakun, on the Endowgyeechoung River. The column was expected to arrive at the Jade Mines on the 8th. The troops had encountered no opposition was expected to arrive at the Jade Mines on the 8th. The troops had encountered no opposition.

Intelligence received from the various columns now in the field in Upper Burma as to the districts traversed by them, together with the interesting and important discoveries they have made, proves how little was previously known of the country. The work now being carried on by the troops in many parts of Upper Burma is rather exploration than military operations. The Irrawaddy is unprecedentedly low, and navigation is a good deal interrupted.

The boot and shoe etiquette in India sorely perplexes native officials on ceremonial occasions. In the Mofussil it is customary for all native Government officials to take off their native shoes before entering the presence of their superior, but if they wear English boots no such change is required. When the Governor of Bombay lately held a levée at Ahmedabad a number of Hindoo official clubbed together to buy a pair of English boots, so as to avoid the indignity of appearing before his Excellency with bare feet. Each took it in turn to wear the boots as he was presented to the Governor, and no small amusement was created outside the levée-room by the officials rushing backwards and forwards to exchange the solitary pair of boots with the next-comer.

Before a meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce, held at their offices, Eastcheap, on Friday, Sir R. N. Fowler, M.P., presiding, an address was delivered by Colonel W. Jesser Coope on "Amatongaland; its Commercial and Political Importance." The lecturer observed that the country which formed the subject of his paper had of late years been so little frequented by white men that its very name, Mapootaland, seemed to have been lost sight of. As a matter of fact, there was no such country as Amatongaland, and no such people as the Amatonga. Proceeding to speak of the commercial importance of the country, he classed the subject under three heads—railway, port, and canals. He was not in favour of spending the sum of £5,000,000 which had been mentioned as required to establish a commercial port at Delagoa Bay. A mere fraction of this amount would, he said, create at Kosi a far superior port, which, when completed, would be the coaling station looked for in those latitudes by the British India, Orient, and P. and O. Steamships. Coal being found in the near neighbourhood, it could be brought down by canals and delivered free on board at a much lower rate than it could be supplied either at Durban or Delagoa Bay.

SUPPLY OF GOORKHA RECRUITS. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

A Military Correspondent writes:—There cannot be the slightest doubt in the minds of Military men who are acquainted with facts, that the Government of India nowadays experience very considerable difficulty in obtaining yearly a sufficient number of Goorkha recruits to fill up the casualties a sufficient number of Goorkha recruits to fill up the casualties in their Battalions and keep them up to their full strength of all ranks. This difficulty has been greatly enhanced during these last few years by the addition of four new Goorkha Battalions to the strength of the standing Army. To form these 2nd Battalions of the 1st, 2nd, 4th, and 5th Regiments of Goorkha, the Indian Government was compelled to solicit the aid of the Nepal Durbar. That ally, willing to comply with the exigencies of the Empire, most obligingly sent us down, even from the confines of Thibet (often much against the will of those so enlisted) several thousand men; but these even we of those so enlisted), several thou and men; but these even we are obliged to supplement with hill-men, to bring up the Battalions to their proper strength of 912 men of all ranks.

Now, in British territory, without having recourse to the Nepal Durbar, all along our Terai Himalayan hill districts—viz., from Darjeeling in the East to Simla in the North-West there is scattered about a vast amount of real Goorkha material if the Government chose to make use of, or properly economise it.

All along their Terai and Hill Districts—viz., petty States round about Simla, Simoor, Mussoorie, and the Dun Ghurwal, both Native and British, Philibut, Oudh, Terai, Baraich, Goruckpore, Mozuffurpore, Tittalea, and Darjeeling—are to be found Goorkhas and descendants of Goorkhas. In England, for the Military training of the Allican Residual Collins of Contract training of the Collins of Contract training of Contract found Goorkhas and descendants of Goorkhas. In England, for the Military training of lads (soldiers' children) as soldiers in the regular Army, the Duke of York's School in Chelsea has proved, during all the years it has been in existence, a most unqualified success. I know, both from personal experience and from conversation with other officers, that soldiers who have been, as children, brought up at that institution make not only the best of soldiers, but, what is more, A-1 non-commissioned officers. Such must be the case, as these men, as children, at a very early age, learn what obedience to orders means; and a lad who thoroughly understands that, when he comes to man's estate will not only know how to obey an comes to man's estate will not only know how to obey an order, but, what is more, how to give an order and see that order properly carried out.

In the year 1795 the British Government caused three experimental Battalions to be formed; these were the 22nd, the 34th, and the 65th Regiments. Each Regiment was composed of 1,000 boys from the ages of ten to sixteen. These boys were allowed to enlist, and after enlistment were forwarded by their respective parishes to a recruiting depôt which had beginned at the town of Calchester. From the subsequent him their respective parishes to a recruiting depôt which had been formed at the town of Colchester. From the subsequent history of most of these lads who thus joined the British Army, there can be no doubt that they made excellent soldiers, several of them even rising to the rank of commissioned officers.

Boy Regiments of a similar character might easily and advantageously be recruited from the material we have described. From conversations we have had with Native officers in the Dera Dun District alone, there must be at the very least 2,000 Goorkha lads between the ages of ten to sixteen, the sons and descendants of Goorkhas who have, at some time or another, served in the Indian Army. These pensioners and ex-soldiers would, I have little reason to doubt, only be too happy to make over their children, after they have attained the age of ten years (if a medical man considered only be too happy to make over their children, after they have attained the age of ten years (if a medical man considered them physically fitted for it), to enlist in these regiments. Even if regiments were not formed, all this admirable, but up to the present time wasted material might be formed into companies and attached to the various Regiments of Goorkhas. Here they could be instructed in a certain amount of Hindee and English, and not only drilled but made also to go through courses of gymnastics so as to develop their limbs and make them active. When one of these lads reached the age of sixteen, if he was physically fitted for it, he could be enlisted teen, if he was physically fitted for it, he could be enlisted into one of the Battalions of Goorkhas. Thus, at a cominto one of the Battalions of Goorkhas. Thus, at a comparatively little trouble or expense, the Government would be able to obtain a constant stream of trained soldiers of a superior stamp to fill up the vacancies caused by deaths and invaliding in the ranks of their very best, bravest, and most trustworthy Native troops. The boys enlisted in the manner we recommend could be formed into messes in accordance with their castes, and, if so formed, their food and clothing would not amount on an average to more than Rs.2 per head per mensem. mensem.

BRIDGING THE IRRAWADDY. (Mandalay Herald.)

Whatever railway scheme may ultimately be adopted for bringing Eastern Burma into connection with the Assam

Railway system, it will be necessary to bridge the Irrawaddy. At first it seemed to us, and to many who had made but a cursory examination of the river, that such a project would be so stupendous, so costly, as to be almost impracticable for the present. No doubt it will cost a considerable sum; indeed, one of the chief factors in the discussion concerning the proposed lines is the cost of bridging the river at the various points posed lines is the cost of bridging the river at the various points, suggested. It does not follow, however, that the cheapest line is necessarily the best; and, though economical considerations might urge carrying the crossing as far to the north as possible, an examination of the traffic question would suggests its being but very little above Mandalay. Of course there are many places in which, on account of the width of the stream, and from the nature of the bottom, such a bridge would almost be improved to the pultimeter site should not be selected. impracticable; and the ultimate site should not be selected without the most careful examination. And as the bulk of the iron work will have to be imported, and then transported, at great cost, it might be as well to employ as much masonry brickwork, and timber, as would be consistent with certain considerations hereafter specified, more especially in the construction of the approaches to and abutments of the main structure. The great rise and fall of the river, together with the inevitable scouring action of the rapid current, suggest the employment of as few piers as possible, and would indicate the employment of braced piles, or cylinders, upon a secure foundation. The immense amount of drift timber, and the danger from rafts, would necessitate clear waterways, and protecting piles, in the fairway. In all probability, unless worked to an enormous depth, or advantage could be taken of a rocky bottom, the foundations of masonry piers would score right out; and except in certain localities, little reliance can be placed upon the current remaining regularly in the same channel; and the bridge, if built on a flat stretch, would have to be supplemented by heavy retaining bunds.

THE PASSING GENERATION OF CIVILIANS. (Pioneer.)

The recent Civil Service dinner in Calcutta, apart from its social aspect, presents food for reflection of a more serious nature. There were gathered together there representatives of three generations of a Service which was justly described as the backbone of the Government of India. There were those whose career in this country is approaching its termination: some few even were present who having served their time have fallen on retirement and well-earned rest. It needed not the Cross of Valour on the breast of one of the guests to remind the older Civilians of how the earliest days of their remind the older Civinans of how the earliest days of their service were spent: theirs was the good fortune either to have shared in the final conquest of India, or to have come to the country at a time when Lucknow, Delhi, and Arrah were living realities of glory, and had not passed into the region of history. The heroes of that glorious campaign were yet amongst them. They breathed the inspirations and laid to heart the traditions of the Service to which they belonged, from the lips of those who had made history. To them was To them was from the lips of those who had made history. committed the work of healing the land which was sorely shaken; theirs was the task to restore order out of chaos, and the India of to-day speaks as to the manner in which their mission was fulfilled. Looked up to by the people, unfettered by routine, allowed the free exercise of judgment, they accomplished a task which under the present system would be a hopeless one were it not that at the first sign of trouble that at system itself would give way. They acted first and reported afterwards. They were allowed to feel a sense of their own responsibility, and were not tied and bound in every direction by divided authority, departmental intrusion, by circulars, orders and returns. Their social life, too, was one calculated to give them zest for the great work set before them. Promotion was replied and the rupper a replieble soin. More bad the tion was rapid and the rupee a valuable coin. Men had the rank and pay of Collectors at an age when the Civilians of the present day are lucky if they be substantive Joint Magistrates. Stations were sociable and pleasant homes, and field sports were within the range of every man's purse. The passing generation of civilians are closing a career man every day of generation of civilians are closing a career upon every day of which they can look back with pleasure. The regrets of the departing Civilian are always genuine. He is leaving a country in which the best years of his life have been spent and not spent in vain, and with the Australian poet he can say:—

"Could I put my life a few years back
Would I live that life again?
Would I? Of course I would.
What glorious days they were!
It sometimes seems the dream of a dream
That life could have been so fair."

KILLING TRADE IN BOMBAY. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

Lahore has never been a great trading centre, and our Municipal administration seems determined to destroy the chances of commercial improvement which the extension of the railway system of the Punjab might be expected to bring. It has long been notorious that the octroi dues levied here are not only a hindrance to trade, but a serve of constant complaint and discontent among the people. They are heavier in proportion, and levied on a larger number of articles than in any other city in Northern India. But they do not suffice for the needs of the Corporation, which recently issued a new tariff, asking for objections. It is not very likely that private persons will take the trouble to examine the new proposals in detail; but when we say that of all the long list of dutiable articles a reduction is only made on oil-seeds, on which formerly three annas a maund were levied, and which will in future only pay two annas per maund, while the rates on some thirty other items is raised and some hitherto untaxed articles brought into the schedule, it will be seen that the public has some ground for taking an interest in the subject. From the poor man's point of view, it seems hard to levy an anna in the rupee on every kind of fruit, ripe and unripe, fresh or green; but this may be intended for a wise sanitary precaution. Kerosine oil and kerosine lamps have hitherto been exempt, to the great satisfaction of the Native public, who have learned to discard the dirty chirag and the greasy shamadan in favour of the bright and clearly mitti ka tel. In future kerosine is to pay three annas a tin, and an anna in every rupee is to be levied on the lamps we import. The European tobacco-smoker is treated with no more consideration than the Hindoo betel chewer, for his cheroots, cigarettes, and imported tobaccos are also to pay two annas in the rupee. Portland cement and paper-hangings have hitherto escaped, but henceforward on the former eight annas a cask will be charged, and an anna in each rupee's worth of the latter. Large animals for slaughter, on which six annas are paid at Simla, are here to pay a rupee each, and poultry and game of all kinds are to pay anna in the rupee. Eggs have not been included

UPPER BURMA. (Pioneer.)

Private letters from officers serving in Upper Burma show how thorough has been the pacification secured in the majority of the districts. The settlement of the Yaw country is proceeding satisfactorily, and when this has been accomplished there will really be no disturbed tracts. The work which fell to the lot of the soldiers last cold weather has not had to be done over again, for dacoit leaders are now scarce, and such few bands as still hold together are slow to show themselves. The main point upon which we insisted when the measures for breaking down all organised opposition were being matured was that the mass of the people should be reassured; they had been so terrorised by dacoits that they feared to aid our officials and troops in any way. It is satisfactory to learn the people now have the fullest confidence in our power to protect them, and that they look upon the new régime as being firmly and absolutely established. This has been in a great measure due, not to the passage of flying columns from end to end of Upper Burma, but to the posting of military police at hundreds of villages where their presence is a guarantee that local disorders will be instantly suppressed. It is this assurance of safety which is simplifying administrative work of all kinds; district officers find the people amenable to control now that every jungle is not filled with lurking robbers ready to raid upon villages and to punish all who had assisted the troops. In fact, Upper Burma is already reaping the first fruits of that peace and security which follow the annexation of territory by the British Government, and the natural prosperity of the people will increase in a proportionate ratio now that the soldier is making way for the representative of the civil authority. The steady advance of the railway between Tounghoo and Mandalay has impressed the Burmans in the Eastern Districts with a great sense of the power of their new rulers, and this agent of civilisation will do more to secure lasting order along the border districts lawlessness must still be looked for, there is an end of dacoity as a system and profession. Mr. Crosthwaite's speech last year at the Mandalay Durbar predicted a speedy change for the better throughout the new Province, and that his anticipations were not over-sanguine has been already clearly demonstrated. The policy of "thorough" has involved a heavy outlay undoubtedly, but the expenditure has been made once and for all time, and the return is likely to be all the more rapid, simply by reason of the pacification having been secured in so short a time.

BENGAL.

Mr. R. RAMPINI, who has been gazetted Additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, will be placed on special duty to try compensation cases arising under the Land Acquisition Act in connection with the ground taken up for the Calcutta Docks.

THE result of the official inquiry into the recent accident on the Northern Bengal Railway is that the driver of the train is held responsible, the danger signals having been proved to be in position and the permanent-way inspector being on the spot while the rails were being changed. The driver, who is an old servant of the Company, will be placed on trial. The damages are small, and will be covered by Rs. 6,000. Another of the men injured has died.

It is understood to be definitely settled that Colonel Browne, R.E., Chief Engineer and Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Public Works Department, will retire on promotion to Major-General in March next, and that he will, in all probability, be succeeded in both appointments by Mr. E. J. Martin, an officer with a long roll of service in the province, who designed the Calcutta Exhibition of 1884, the façade of Writers' Buildings, the New Treasury Buildings, &c.

A MEETING has been held at Calcutta in connection with the Kristodas Pal Memorial Fund. The report of the committee showed Rs. 12,000 only collected, so the idea of founding an eye infirmary was abandoned. Babu Kunju Lal Banerji regretted that his countrymen should have been so inert toperpetuate the memory of such a distinguished man as the late Kristodas Pol. He had hoped they would have come forward in a liberal way. Out of a subscription of Rs. 20,000, only Rs. 12,000 had been collected. It was decided to erect a statue in some public building, and for this a sum of Rs. 17,000 was necessary. The committee hope to make upthat amount.

MR. C. A. Kelly, who the other day resigned the Bengal Civil Service, was comparatively a young man, a District Judge with an excellent reputation, who, had he only stayed on, would probably have seen the Bench of the High Court, and drawn his four or five thousand rupees a month. He is the son of Admiral Kelly. A Master of Arts of Oxford and an excellent scholar, he has found time amid his judicial duties to throw off several short poems on classical (Greek) subjects, which have appeared from time to time in the Calcutta Review. An earlier separate publication of his, "The World's Martyrs," can compare favourably with most recent poems in the English language.

MADRAS.

THE Governor of Pondicherry has again addressed the Madras Government on the expediency of extending the existing night service on the South Indian Railway to the Pondicherry branch also, and, in doing so, has urged that such a service is absolutely necessary, at least during the groundnut season.

The Secretary of State having accorded his smiction to the constitution of two new professorships—one of Engineering and Mathematics—in connection with the reorganisation of the teaching staff of the College of Engineering, Madras, his Lordship has been requested by Government to arrange that the two professors may arrive in this country from England towards the end of June, so as to be ready for the opening of the College on Aug. 1. The new building is expected to be ready for occupation by the end of May.

THE Pondicherry groundnut trade for the current year has practically commenced. The prices were nominal but prohibitive. Opinions differ as to the probable crop available for export, but it is doubtful if the present year's shipments will exceed 750,000 bags. Now that Bombay has become a competitor for the trade, under conditions generally superior to those obtaining at Pondicherry, a disturbance of the only available trade left for the little capital of French India is apprehended.

A MEETING has been held for the purpose of concerting measures to inaugurate a new Club on the Mount Road. The meeting was well attended. Mr. Donald Calder was voted to the chair. The object of the meeting having been explained, a resolution was passed that a Club be started on the Mount Road, and a committee of gentlemen was appointed to frame the requisite rules, and to consider the basis upon which the Club should be worked. The committee will present its report to a specially convened meeting.

BOMBAY.

Mr. George Jacob, Joint Judge and Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, has assumed charge of the duties of Registrar of the High Court, Appellate Side, during the absence on leave of Mr. C. E. G. Grawford for twenty-one months.

MISS OXLEY, of Guy's Hospital, and Miss Loch, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, have been appointed by the Secretary of State for India to the charge of the nurses which it is intended to introduce into the Military Hospitals in India.

It is said that Mr. Ali Abdulla, when he was at Hyderabad a couple of months since, petitioned his Highness' Government for a reconsideration of the order of banishment passed in his case three years ago. It is not probable, however, that the order will be cancelled yet awhile. In the meantime he is the Government Agent in Bombay, for which appointment he draws a handsome salary.

It is stated that during the hot weather, the Minister of Hyderabad, accompanied by Colonel Marshall and some of the secretaries to Government, will go to Simla in order to see the Viceroy. It is probable that the questions regarding his Highness' Army and the Railway to Raipore will be settled during this visit. The Minister and Colonel Marshall, it is said, agree with each other regarding the course to be adopted in regard o both these subjects.

A COMMITTEE has been appointed at Goa for the organisation and distribution of the police force in view of the opening of the new railway. The want of security of life and property has been so notorious that such a measure inspiring public confidence is of the utmost importance at the present moment, when the movements of passengers and traffic will need protection against the gang of dacoits who have been disturbing the peace of the country.

THERE has been a great treasure trove in the Golconda Fort. While excavating the foundation of the Golconda Brigade Mess-house, the workmen came upon two copper vessels containing 130 pounds weight of gold bars and ancient gold coins called Huns, evidently minted in the days of the Rajahs of Golconda. The coins were impressed on one side only. There was also a quantity of silver, the total value being about one-and-a-quarter lakhs. It all goes to the Nizam's privy purse.

THE seven Khyber Maliks have left for Kurrachee by the British India Steam Navigation Company's steamer Khiva. They were accompanied by Colonel Warburton, who, under instructions from the Viceroy, has been their cicerone through their Indian tour. Starting from the Adumjee Peerbhoy Sanitarium, their temporary residence, they were driven to the Apollo Bunder, where a Government steam launch was kept in readiness, in which, attended by their nine Afghan servants, they proceeded to the steamer Khiva. The prospect of a voyage on the waters of the sea, a wholly new experience to them, seemed to give them much delight as they left the shore for the steamer.

His Excellency the Minister of Hyderabad has taken the financial work of the Government into his own hands, and has directed that certain accounts and papers, which have hitherto been submitted to Nawab Mooneer-ul-Mulk, shall in future be sent to him direct. Nawab Mooneer-ul-Mulk was never actually Financial Minister, but used to assist his brother in the general financial work of the State. Colonel Marshall and the Minister are to meet and discuss the financial position of the Government, and consider what reductions can be made in the expenditure.

At their meeting on January 30th, the Bombay Corporation resumed consideration of the new Municipal Budget. Mr. Dosabhoy Framji proposed that the estimate of expenditure on the fire-brigade establishment be passed at Rs. 1,16,086, as against the last year's estimate of Rs. 75,000. Mr. Dosabhoy explained that the increase this year in the charge was, to a great extent, due to the proposed establishment of a few additional fire-engine stations at Parel, Tardeo, and other places, where they are needed for the protection of mills and other valuable property. After a long discussion, the estimate was passed, and at the suggestion of Major Martin a committee was appointed to consider the question of the reorganisation of the fire-brigade establishment. It was admitted, on all hands, that the salaries of the engineers employed on the establishment were too high, and that as vacancies occurred, new men should be employed on a much lower scale of pay.

A FIRE broke out on Sunday morning, January 29th, at the Arthur Crawford Markets, in which twenty-five godowns, occupied by the market people, and one by the Superintendent of the markets, were destroyed. It appears that at about half-past two o'clock a fire was observed by Mr. Higgins' son, who at once reported the matter to his father, Mr. P. C. Higgins, the Superintendent, who telephoned to the police. There was, however, some delay in the arrival of assistance, and water in sufficient quantity could not be obtained for some time to work the engines of the fire brigade. The fire was, however, extinguished about six hours after. The damage is estimated at Rs. 75,000, Rs. 25,000 being the property of the Municipality. The roof of the building, although constructed of corrugated iron, gave way, causing much damage to goods and property. The origin of the fire is not yet known. It is supposed to have been caused by careless biddee smoking.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

The report on the Cawnpore Experimental Station for the rabi season of 1886-87 is hardly so satisfactory as could be wished. "We have the orthodox accounts of experiments with different manures and seeds and ensilage," remarks an up-country paper, "but there seems little approach to definite results, and it is disappointing to learn that the sale of improved agricultural implements has, on the whole, been less brisk than formerly."

THE persistent outery about the dislocation of the mail service in Oudh and the North-West in consequence of the failure of correspondence between the East India and Oudh and Rohilkund Railway time-tables, is to bear fruit in an official Congress. The above Companies and the North-Western line, as also the Post Office, will send representatives; the Consulting Engineers for Railways in Oudh and Bengal will also attend. Orders for the assembly, which is to take place in Calcutta, have been issued.

On the suggestion of the Vice-Chancellor, the Oriental Faculty at Lahore has recently determined in appointing examiners, to follow the rule of selecting men, as far as possible, from outside provinces, and avoiding in every case the appointment of men who were either connected with the Oriental College or were resident at Lahore. The selection of examiners for the next examination in Oriental Languages has been made in accordance to the above principle, and includes men of well known standing and attainments in Bengal, the North-West Provinces, Bombay, and Madras, who are well experienced in conducting such examinations, and whose names will be a guarantee that the successful cardidates are deserving of the certificates and diplomas granted to them.

BURMA.

THE Burma telegrams bring the satisfactory news of the capture of Moung Yakuth, almost the last remaining of the notable dacoit leaders in the Province. In this instance the achievement was not due to the troops. A Burmese clerk with a small party of fellow-countrymen, encouraged by the presence of the columns in the Yaw country, and stimulated no doubt by the price of Rs. 5,000 which was on the dacoit's head, went in themselves, and after a sharp struggle effected his capture.

NATIVE PRESS.

ENHANCEMENT OF THE SALT DUTY.

The Rast Goftar says:—The autocratic form of Government under which we live is strikingly exemplified by the manner in which the duty on salt has been raised. The Government, one may imagine, said, "Let the salt tax be increased;" and the salt tax was increased. The people of India awoke one morning, and found a pithy announcement in a Government Gazette Extraordinary, that, on and after such and such a date, the duty on this necessary of life shall be raised from Rs.2 to Rs.2-8 per maund.

The native Press generally has raised a hue and cry over this enhancement. The tax has been regarded by many of these papers as most odious, and it is one of the established beliefs among them that it falls with crushing weight upon the poor masses. They are, no doubt, much embittered in their opposition by the abrupt and unceremonious announcement by the Government of a fiscal measure of the utmost importance.

The deficit is to be greatly attributed to the

. . . . The deficit is to be greatly attributed to the enormous expenditure which the Government have incurred in the pacification of Theebaw's territory, and it would have been only fair, if the expenses had been met by a loan to be repaid in the happy future, when the country will yield a large surplus. Such a future is not considered improbable in many quarters; and we are glad to see at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held recently, merchants, like Mr. Meili and Mr. Forrest, expressed themselves emphatically in favour of the Government raising a loan, in preference to the increase in the tax on salt.

The Akbari-Soudagar says:—The increase in the Salt-tax has set the entire country by the ears. The Native Press generally condemns the increase in the tax, while some of the Anglo-Indian journalists, for reasons which we have not far to seek, advocate its increase. The latter are glad that the middle and upper classes have escaped a further imposition of the Income-tax, as the deficiency in the Government treasury is now sought to be filled by an increase in the Salt-tax. It is true that the well-to-do classes will not feel this increase, but it will be tantamount to denying the use of the salt to the poor. Salt tax can hardly be said to be an equitable tax. The rich and poor have to consume the article very nearly in equal quantities, and it is hardly fair that the poor should be made to pay the same tax on it as the rich.

The Municipal Bill.—The Rast Goftar says:—Captain Selby's eloquent address on Thursday in support of his proposition to make over the amended Municipal Bill to the committee of the entire Corporation, which first examined the Bill indeail, was a clear and concise exposition of what has already been and what yet remains to be conceded by the Legislature towards the success of Local Self-Government in Bombay. With a moderation in tone, which it was refreshing to notice, Captain Selby gave due credit to the Select Committee for the important changes which, with a graceful retreat all over the line, it has introduced in the principle of the constitutional clauses; and dealing with the few points of principle only, the mover further showed conclusively, and not without a good deal of hopefulness in the wisdom of our legislators, that the few important claims yet denied must be granted, if, consistently with themselves, they were to carry the principle, already admitted, to its logical conclusion. No better testimony of Captain Selby's thorough independence could be adduced than the circumstance that, being himself a Government nominee, he demanded the withdrawal of all Government nominees from the reformed Corporation of the future. He wound up his oration by a tribute of praise to the press generally, and to the Times of India in particular, for fighting the battle of popular government of the city. The graceful compliment to our contemporary is perfectly well-merited for having been the first and the foremost to raise the cry of liberty, which was threatened, but which has been in a great measure restored.

HARBOUR DEFENCE of Bombay.—The Jame-Jamshed says:—It is for the good of this city that Lord Brassey has again awakened the British Government to the comparatively defenceless state of the Bombay harbour. The authorities are now on the alert, and have been bestowing their best attention to secure the city from the attacks of a possible enemy. But the house owners of Bombay do not in the least appear to be anxious for their lives and property. They must know that if the city is ever attacked by an enemy, it will be many years before they can restore it to its present state of prosperity. We are of opinion, therefore, that the house owners, as well as the merchants and tradesmen of this city; should take the matter in hand by holding monster public meetings, and raise large subscriptions to be placed in the hands of Government to enable them to secure the harbour defences in the best way they can.

Proposed Tax on Petroleum.—The Bombay Samachar says:—The Government are yet bent upon increasing the taxation. It is now proposed to levy a heavy duty on petroleum imported into this country. Those who trade in petroleum will now have a good time of it, as they will increase the selling rates of this article to a considerable degree on the pretence that there has been a tax levied upon it by Government. A bottle of petroleum was at first sold in the market at five pice per bottle, but latterly an extra pice is charged for it, by the tradesmen of this city on the pretence that the Bombay Municipality have levied town duty upon the article. Although the town duty does not come to a pice or a quarter anna per bottle, yet the tradesmen have hitherto been benefited by the increased rate ever since the levy of that duty. The Petroleum Bill has not yet passed into law, and yet the rate per bottle of that article has been increased from six pice to two annas. This increased rate will surely deprive most of the poorer classes from enjoying the blessings of a light which they hitherto enjoyed on account of the cheap rate at which petroleum was sold.

FSLAVE TRADE AT CABUL.—A correspondent of the Kaiseri-Hind says:—There is a large market held at Cabul every three months for the sale of slaves brought from Kafristan by brokers of that place. The girls, who are sold as slaves, fetch higher prices than boys or grown up women. These girls are sold by measurement with the span of the hand. They are sold at the rate of about Rs. 20 to Rs. 60 per span. Boys and girls brought from Hazara and Panchseer are not sold by measurement, but are sold individually at about Rs. 80 to Rs. 120each. Only those who profess Mahomedan religion are entitled to make the purchases of slaves. If a Hindoo was known to make such a purchase he is compelled, together with his whole family, to be converted to Mahomedanism.

"Special Assistant" to the Municipal Commissioner.—The Rast Goftar says: So Rao Saheb Veerprasad, the special assistant to the Municipal Commissioner in the Assessment Department, has been granted by the Corporation a fresh lease of life for one more year at least. The Rao Saheb's advocates, at the debate in the Corporation were many, and were loud in their client's praises. But it is a matter for wonder that none of them thought fit to answer the statement originally made in this paper, and repeated at the meeting by Dr. Bomenjee Master, that the Rao Saheb has brought a train of Banyas after him from Gujerat, and has put them in the place of others who have been either dismissal or pensioned off. It is just possible that the dismissals were made and the pensions were given in the best interest of the Municipality, and it is also just possible that this officer honestly believes in the very superior merits of his own castemen, hailing from his Native province. But in the absence of any definite assurance on the point, we cannot admit the latter proposition as anything more than possibility, especially because of the deplorable fact that nepotism is a great weakness with some of our Hindoo officials in high places. The Kaiser-i-Hind says:—The resolution passed by a majority of the Corporation to retain the service of the "special assistant" to the Commissioner will for ever stand as one of the blindfold actions of that body. The "special" officer has not any particular duties to perform, and therefore, the Rs. 7,200 entered into the budget as the annual salary of that officer is nothing but a pure waste of the rate payers' money. The threat held out by the acting Municipal Commissioner that he would resign his post if the services of his assistant had been dispensed with was unbecoming an officer of his standing and position. The Corporation were not bound to carry out the wishes or commands of the Commissioner. Mr. Charles has has not conferred any special favour on the Corporation by accepting the post which h

THE SOCIAL NUISANCE.—The Native Press generally have been loudly complaining of the recent order of Sir Frank Souter, Commissioner of Police, causing the removal of objectionable women 'rom a particular street in Bombay. The Akbari-Soudagar describes the order as "A freak of Sir Frank Souter."

FRANCE AND THE NEW HEBRIDES.

The declaration agreed upon between England and France defining the functions and powers of the joint Anglo-French Naval Commission for the New Hebrides, and establishing regulations for its guidance, was signed in Paris on the 26th ult., and published on the 14th inst. By this document it is agreed that the Commission shall be immediately instituted, and be composed of naval officers belonging to the British and French stations in the Pacific. It will be charged with the maintenance of order and the protection of the lives and property of British and French subjects in the New Hebrides. The Commission will be composed of a president and two British and two French naval officers to be named by any person having authority for that purpose from the British and French Governments respectively. The president shall be in alternate months the commanding officer of the British and French naval forces respectively present in the group. The Commission shall assemble at request of either commanding officer. The regulations above referred to provide that in the event of a disturbance of peace and good order in any part of the New Hebrides where British or French subjects may be settled, or in case of danger menacing the safety of life and property, the Commission shall forthwith assemble and take such measures as it may think best under the circumstances for repressing disturbance, or for the protection of the interests endangered. Military force shall not be resorted to unless the Commission shall consider its employment indispensable. In the event of a landing of naval or military force, such force shall not remain longer than considered necessary by the Commission. Where the circumstances may not admit of delay and the urgency of the case calls for immediate action before the assembly of the Commission, the British and French commanders nearest to the scene of action shall, in concert, if possible, or separately if such is not practicable, take the necessary measures for the protection of the interests endangered, and

THE Rilli river, where the 32nd Pioneers are about to build a bridge, is only some twenty miles by road from Lingtu, where the Tibetans have established their fortified post. Hence the necessity of employing troops on the work. The Tibetan post is said to consist of a long wall sixteen feet high and eight feet thick with bastions at each end, and quarters for the men holding it. It completely blocks the road, and is very strong. It runs from the summit of the hill to a precipice which borders the road, and can only be turned therefore at one extremity.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE FORTUNES OF ALBERT TRAVERS.*

It has often been said that there is no mischief in life but what a woman is at the bottom of it. Evidently Mr. Berrington is of this mind, for out of the accidental circumstance that a traveller happens to fall in love with the daughter of an inneceper, at whose hostelry the luckless wight had put up for the night, leads to a series of the most astonishing mishaps, misdeeds, and misadventures. This curious tale is of the old-fashioned "blood and thunder" school. The regular Adelphi melodrama seems to rise before the reader as he finds at one time a man made smuggler spite of himself; at another the same individual fighting for his life with the custodians of the faw, albeit himself disposed to join their side, and enter the lists with his quondam colleagues. Then come troubles, wherein the hero is made to love the girl he hates, and hate the girl he loves, till the wonder arises whether matters ever will or, indeed, can come right. As to minor adventures, with the concomitants of trap-doors, swing panels, sham boats in the middle of the room, and much more in the same line, there is an ample supply. The work might well pass muster for an autobiography of some of impersonations of the celebrated "T. P. Cooke," of dramatic fame; and if this style of excitement once had full possession of the public taste, there is, perhaps, no reason why the present generation should be more fastidious than their predecessors. But fashions are changed, and it remains to be seen how far popularity will follow in the wake of Mr. Berrington's somewhat bold venture.

LADY BURTON'S EDITION OF THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.†

Lady Burton's edition of the "Arabian Nights" is now complete, and a more handsome edition to the family library it would be difficult to conceive. The six volumes are bound in white and lettered with gold, so that the work would be most apropos for a wedding present. And what more suitable? The tales are household words, every one is familiar with them in some shape or other, but every one has not hitherto had the chance of reading the "Thousand and One Nights" in a form which accurately reflects the spirit of the original Arabic in which they were written. They may be read and re-read a hundred times, always fresh, always amusing; quaint, imaginative, and thoroughly Eastern. They never weary, they never nauseate.

If, too, an additional charm were needed to render this very piquante Oriental dish more tasty and enjoyable it will be found in the most masterly terminal essay, written of course by Sir Richard Burton, which tells all that can be told as to these popular stories. There the inquirer may learn how the tales were derived from the Persian, how the author is unknown, because, in all probability, the work in its present shape is an ontcome of many men and many minds; how some histories date back as far as the eighth century, while others cannot claim an older origin than the sixteenth century; and, lastly, how the "Nights" have been popularised in Europe claim an older origin than the sixteenth century; and, lastly, how the "Nights" have been popularised in Europe.

But by far the most interesting, and certainly the most instructive, portion of this Essay is that which contains a critical analysis and examination of the "Matter and Manner of the Nights." A careful study of this excessively scholarly production of one of the greatest Orientalists of modern times will serve to add zest to the body of the work which it is designed to illustrate. Much that is none too comprehensible in the tale will henceforth become clear. The laboured peculiarities will no longer puzzle and repel. The marvellous marvels will in future assume a less unreal aspect, because the reader can read with intelligence, and grasp metaphors hitherto obscure and replete with confusion.

And now it only remains to say "as salaam." We have lingered for many months amidst the fancies of Oriental splendour, we have lived once again the times of early youth, when the "Arabian Nights" appealed to the fervent imaginations of the spring of boyhood's years, and we lay down the translation which Lady Burton has prepared charmed and proud—charmed that we can now enter into the inner recesses of Eastern homes hitherto closed to all but a few savants and men of learning—proud that it should have been reserved for an Englishmen to give to the world the best work ever published, throwing light upon the inner life of a race numbering millions of souls who bow the knee in homage to the Empress of India, but who in all but name have hitherto been a sealed book so far as regards their feelings, their habits, and their aspirations. "As salaam."

WHOSE WIFE.*

It may readily be imagined that Colonial heiresses who visit this country are beset with dangers. Strangers to our ways, without the surroundings of home life which are a rampart against the attacks of unscrupulous adventurers, they are and must be an easier prey than their sisters in the mother land. But, making all allowances for these circumstances, it may be doubted whether Mrs. Harcourt Roe has done wisely in allowing her heroine to fall into the most transparent trap of a most transparent villain. Everyone is liable to be befooled, but at least most of us need some little attempt at smartness; we do not walk open-mouthed into the first pit which is dug in our path.

Apart from this criticism the work is by no means devoid of merit. The authoress manages a somewhat tangled skein of events with considerable skill and judgment, It needs careful discretion to play the part of a person at one time supposed to be a widow remarried, and at another to be a wife with two husbands. Nor is artistic ability less necessary, when the latter supposition turns out to be the true state of the case, to bring the tale to a satisfactory conclusion. But Mrs. Harcourt Roe has succeeded, and "Whose Wife" is a pleasing novelette, from which one should be warned, first, never to be an heiress; next, if hard and cruel fate should impose this dire necessity upon a poor daughter of Eve, let her beware that she does not share her fortune with the first person who says pretty things to her for the sake of her money.

"The proper study of mankind is man;" but when history loses itself in the dim and distant ages of obscurity—when all traces of the human family are merged in a sea of doubt and difficulty, what, then, is to be done? Here Professor Max Müller steps in and bids his readers examine the languages which have come down to us, and from them reconstruct the races of bygone times. This sounds admirable commonsense, and one seems, as it were, to follow in the footsteps of Professor Owen, who, out of a few old bones, made the perfect skeleton of a pre-historic animal. But on further examination the student will not find this advice so easy of adoption. He will learn that of all difficult and in some way unsatisfactory studies nothing is so untangible as the science of philology; it is a very ignis fatuus of the philosophic mind. No two persons can agree even as to the very elements of inquiry—scarce a word but what possesses a derivation differing according to the judgment and fancy of each particular savant. How, then, is it possible to draw deductions when the facts themselves are open to dispute? That this is no theoretical fancy, but a real practical difficulty, may be gathered from the circumstance that the science has made but little headway spite the immense diligence of its votaries, and the powerful intelligence which is brought into play in its pursuit. Take, as example, for years and years discussion has been rife as to the "Home of the Aryas." Where was it? When was it? And yet withal in this the nineteenth century of grace, not only is the exact spot still undefined, but even the Continent which gave these early settlers shelter remains a subject of mystery.

These remarks are not penned in depreciation of Mr. Max Müller's hypotheses, which are always clever and at times almost convincing, but merely to show the utter hopelessness of criticising what is hopelessly involved, and as yet entirely unravelled. The present volume is well worthy of perusal as the outcome of mature thought and careful study. All will not agree with the various dogmas and the multitudinous surmises; but all will respect the learning and zeal of its author, and the ardent earnestness which he has thrown into a complicated and obtuse sphere of literary inquiry.

Messrs. Gordon and Gotch's Australian Handbook for 1888 is a work which will be found indispensable to all who are interested politically, commercially, or socially in Australia and New Zealand. First published eighteen years ago this Directory and Business Guide has yearly increased in size and in usefulness regarding the extent and variety of the information it gives. It is full of valuable matter showing intelligent labour and research, and gives a number of excellent maps (coloured) illustrating the various countries and districts of which it treats. It is a most comprehensive compilation.

Hart's Annual Army List for 1888 (John Murray) comes with praiseworthy punctuality and scrupulous care as to accuracy. No more appreciative service was rendered to the army than that rendered by the late Lieut. General H. G.

The India List, Civil and Military, issued by permission of the Secretary of State for India in Council by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., shows in its issue for the present half-year the same care in compilation and correctness which have always distinguished it. It is the most complete book of reference concerning the Indian Services, and is replete with much valuable official information. We should like to find in its future issues a record of the War Services of Indian Officers if this could be done as in the case of Hart's Quarterly and Annual Annual Lists. Army Lists.

The hakims, or State physicians, considered it a hopeless case, and, after consultation, decided that the life of their master might be saved by a blood bath. Some interesting information about Jeddah is supplied by Some interesting information about Jeddah is supplied by Consul Jago in his report for the year 1887. During the year 46,020 pilgrims arrived at Jeddah, against 42,374 in 1886. Classed according to nationality these were: British Indians, 10,324; Egyptians, 9,337; Turks and Syrians, 6,829; Moors, Algerines, &c., 6,738; Javanese, 4,968; Arabs, 1,833; Yemenis, 1,759; Persians, 1,696; and Soudanese, 773. British steamers brought 46.7 per cent. of the total number, as against 53 per cent. in 1886, and carried away 56 per cent., as against 55 per cent. on the previous year. The waterworks, begun by public subscription three years since, to bring water into Jeddah from a natural reservoir in the adjacent hills four hours' distant, are now completed, and public fountains have been erected in the now completed, and public fountains have been erected in the town for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants, who hitherto have had to depend upon rain-water collected in tanks in the desert outside the walls. Beyond two slight showers no rain has fallen here for thirteen months, although showers no rain has fallen here for thirteen months, although the province generally has been visited more abundantly, Medina especially having suffered much from heavy rainstorms. The quality of the water is excellent, and some improvement may be hoped for in its general unhealthines. No system of drainage prevails, however. A large cesspool is constructed in the centre of the foundations of a house when being built, which, when full, is emptied by the simple method of digging a big hole in the street before the door, and transferring its contents to it. Thus Jeddah has become a mighty cesspool, which with the excessively damp heat of 90 degrees, which generally prevails, sufficiently accounts for the great mortality from fevers, which makes it the most unhealthy town on the Red Sea. town on the Red Sea.

INDIAN MINES.—The feature in the mining market during ne past week has been the demand for the shares of the gold mining companies of the Deccan. The speculative public have had much cause to rue their investments in these concerns. Many came out with a "huge fanfare" in 1881, and straight-Many came out with a "huge fanfare" in 1881, and straightway rose to a high premium, only to decline after many bitter disappointments to a nominal sum representing little more than the value of the paper on which they were printed. The one saviour of the whole group has been the Mysore, which, since its commencement, has crushed 24,000 tons, yielding an average of over an ounce to the ton. The £1 share has been as high as 9, and, though it has receded to 3, it advanced again, during the last week, to 4. Captain Plummer has resigned, and an experienced miner will succeed him. The neighbouring mines are also apparently looking up, for the exports from the Ooregum, the Nundydroog, the Indian Consolidated, and the Goldfields of Mysore are distinctly encouraging. If there be any truth in reports of the auriferons nature of certain districts in India, and of this the late Mr. Brough Smyth appeared convinced, it is high time that it should be conclusively proved, tricts in India, and of this the late Mr. Brough Smyth appeared convinced, it is high time that it should be conclusively proved, after the long delays and disappointments which have taken place. Anyway, if investors wish to come in, they can certainly do so now with far more confidence than in the early days, and it is very possible that before many months a marked rise will take place in the value of Indian Gold Shares; but even then they do not appear to promise such a yield as has already been produced by Australia, nor such as South Africe is now beginning to put forth Africa is now beginning to put forth.

THE Allahabad paper remarks that the action of the Govern-THE Allanabad paper remarks that the action of the Government of India in ordering a Pioneer regiment into Sikkim to repair the bridge over the Rilli river must not be construed into an actual intention to begin hostilities with the Tibetans forthwith. The fact that the infantry are to be accompanied by two mountain guns may seem significant; but it must be remembered that the distance from the Rilli to Lingtu, where by two mountain guns may seem significant; but it must be remembered that the distance from the Rilli to Lingtu, where the Tibetans have a party of men holding their fortified post, is only some twenty miles by road, and that contingencies must consequently be guarded against. The Lamas have grown so arrogant through our forbearance that they may feel tempted, even at this season of the year, to place a considerable body of men at Lingtu, and even threaten our working parties. If they are foolish enough to do that, then hostilities will be forced upon us, and the Tibetans will be driven back into their own country as soon as a force can be got together to operate against them. It is not intended to send British infantry at present; but precautions have been taken to have these ready to move at a few hours' notice if matters assume a serious aspect. The immediate object of moving some 700 or 800 men, into Sikkim is to exert a moral effect both upon the Tibetans and the subjects of the Raja of Sikkim. They will see that the limit of forbearance on the part of the Government of India has been passed, and that preparations are being made to break down, once and for all, the influence which the Lamas have for some time past exerted in Sikkim affairs. The capture of the Lingtu Fort, or breastwork as it really is, is only a minor point after all; the real object is a political one. If the present display of force is sufficient to induce the Tibetans to abandon Lingtu, and this is just possible, though we are not very sanguine on the point, then no expedition in the real meaning of the term will be needed. The Lamas will have admitted that they have no locus standi in the affairs of Sikkim, and the Raja of that State will doubless show anxiety to fulfil his that they have no locus standi in the affairs of Sikkim, and the Raja of that State will doubless show anxiety to fulfil his treaty obligations with India.

A SANITARY DIFFICULTY ON BOARD SHIP .- On the arrival of the P. and O. Company's steamship Ravenna, Captain A. B. Daniell, in Plymouth Sound, on the 6th inst, from China and Bombay, the doctor of the ship reported a case of German measles on board. Dr. Fox, port sanitary medical officer, went to the Ravenna, and then the surgeon of the ship reported four cases of German measles on board. surgeon of the ship reported four cases of German measles on board—two Lascars and two children. Dr. Fox proceeded on board the Ravenna, and having carefully examined the patients found that every care and precaution had been taken to isolate the cases. It appeared that shortly after leaving Sucz two of the Lascar crew became sick, and it was thought by the doctor that they were suffering from what is known as German measles. In a few days one of the Lascars recovered sufficiently to be allowed to go about his ordinary work, while the other man became worse. Clean bills of health, however, were given by the quarantine officers at Malta and Gibraltar. Shortly after given by the quarantine officers at Malta and Gibraltar. leaving the last-named port two boys, aged nine and four years respectively, sons of Colonel Skinner, sickened with the same disease from which the Lascars had been suffering. It was felt to be most unwise to remove Mrs. Skinner, who was accompanied by her sister, Miss Baird, daughter of General Baird, and two children, to the hospital ship under the circumstances of disease being on board, and especially as the accommodation there is very limited. Dr. Fox wrote a special order granting permission for the passengers who wished to disembark at Plymouth to land, as they were "free from infectious disease," and deeming that it would be highly dangerous to place Mrs. Skinner and her children on board the Pique as smallpox existed there, allowed them with the afflicted Lascars. to proceed in the vessel to allowed them, with the afflicted Lascars, to proceed in the vessel to

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1888.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

THE so-called "National Congress" having concluded its sittings at Madras, is now being discussed in the Press of India, European as well as Native, as to the results likely to follow from its deliberations. The Madras Mail, which is owned and edited by Sir Charles Lawson, is particularly indignant with the Times and its Calcutta correspondent for hinting that the whole affair was a sham, and for saying that "the half Europeanised natives of the Presidency towns cannot be accepted as representatives of their uncultivated fellows," and that "the real pith and sap of all the Indian nationalities remains voiceless." The Madras paper considers that the Times might have expressed less confidence on this point had it been aware that the number of delegates at the Congress exceeded in number the total of members of the House of Commons, and that in most cases these delegates were elected by a large number of their countrymen. The London paper is reminded that the India of 1888 is not the India of 1858, but requires different treatment, and that the Congress movement is not to be arrested by misrepresentation or stopped by insult. "The proceedings," we are told, "were conducted from beginning to end not only with decency and order, but were marked by a sense of responsibility, and a desire to avoid giving cause for reasonable offence. The fluency of the speakers is admitted only to be ridiculed, but talk is the deity of the day in England, and it is inconsistent to regard that as a vice in India which is acclaimed as proof of the highest intelligence, and as the best qualification for high official employment, in England. Out of the fulness of their heads and hearts did the speakers talk at the Congress, and the moderation of the language that they employed in their advocacy of reforms that they honestly thought to be due to the India of today should be acknowledged even by those critics who protest against the idea that any reforms are needed." Now we cannot help thinking that our worthy and well-informed Madras friend doth protest too much himself. Who is there who, speaking from any experience of the country, says that the India of to-day should receive the same treatment as the India of 1858, and where are the critics that deny that any reforms are needed? The Madras Mail is of opinion that the hostility to the Congress which it denounces is to be found in the attitude of the Times and of several influential papers in India; but here is what the Pioneer, the most thoroughgoing supporter of the Civil Service régime, says on the subject:—

No one will attempt to deny that India offers a wide field for the application of certain principles of social reform; not a day passes but evidence is afforded of the benefits that might be conferred on the people if only those who have been fortunate enough to receive an English education would bestir themselves. But unfortunately our reformers' interests lie in the desk at which they can indite philippics against the Government, or the platform from which they can preach the doctrine of their own worthiness and the great advantages to the State of entrusting power into their own hands. refuse to recognise that the political constitution of the West is not adapted to the wants of India; that what may be thought the highest form of polity in England would be anarchy if summarily introduced into India; that the conflicting interests of the many races in the Peninsula cannot be reconciled in a moment by this or that political nostrum; and that the so-called national feeling upon which they dilate is at present a myth. They desire first to reform the Government and then to deal with the evils which oppress the social life of the people. There is as much sense in this as if a surgeon with a wounded man in his charge were first to treat him for some obscure constitutional disease and then proceeded to dress his wounds. No one who wishes to see India progress dress his wounds. No one who wishes to see India progress in civilisation and material prosperity can help feeling that the practical faculty is sadly wanting just now among those who claim to lead the people. Give us political freedom that we may rule ourselves; give us arms that we may defend ourselves; give us everything that the free peoples of Europe have; and we will justify your wisdom in thus emancipating us." That is the demand that is made, and because the answer thereto is that such gifts can only be given when they are earned we are treated to some very fine talk about the rights of the people, national aspirations, necessity of reform, and what not. What practical purpose can possibly be served by this sort of agitation?

None whatever, we make bold to say. The clamour for representative institutions among the mixed races of India is a delusion and a snare, and the wise men of the East know this. Allowing that we must give greater scope to Native energies and honourable ambitions than we have hitherto done, it must be understood that we canonly do so without jeopardising in any way the strength and stability of British rule. It may be, as the Madras Mail says, that our Administration is too alien and uninformed to be in the fullest possible harmony with the country at large, and that "within limits prescribed by considerations of prudence the whole system of government should be unalienised in order to be nationalised"; but how is this problem to be solved? Not, certainly, by granting the demands which some of the Congress Delegates so loquaciously put forward, and the limits of which were certainly not prescribed by any considerations of prudence. Even the Mail, which recommends such caution, declares that there is no disposition in any quarter to allege that India under British rule is less fortunate than she would be under any other rule, nor to contend that India is within measurable distance of the time when she will be sufficient unto herself. Why, therefore, encourage agitation the object of which is to make the people of England believe that the millions of India are dissatisfied and discontented, and long for political changes of the most radical nature? It would show lamentable weakness and an utter want of the sense of responsibility were the Paramount Power in India to yield to clamour of this kind. As the Pioneer fitly says: -" Great States are not ruled on the principle that change is good for the sake of change, and that a novel theory must succeed because of its novelty; progress must be slow and painful in all countries that aim at attaining political freedom, and India is the one country in the world where the slowness and the pain must be patiently endured."

IN MEMORIAM.

SIR ROBERT MONTGOMERY, G.C.S.I., K.C.B. SIR HENRY J. S. MAINE, K.C.S.I., LL.D., D.C.L. The honoured Men who bore those names have passed Forward into the Everlasting Future. None are destroyed by death, surely not these, Who, having trod the duty-path on earth With steadfast purpose and unwearied zeal, Have heard the Gracious Voice say, "Come up higher!" And letting titles here and honours fall, As for a time they quit their outward forms, Stand, in the grand integrity of worth, Companions of the Order of Great Souls, Of which the King of kings is the Grand Master. Both wise and great in counsel and in rule, And both in widest circle well beloved, One in a stern emergency stood firm,
And stemmed the tide of ruinous rebellion,
The other sounded depths of thought and wisdom.
The lustre of the Empire will not pale Whilst men like these shine in our midst, and leave Others as great to fill their vacant places, And guard the glory of our English name. A. K.

In answer to Sir R. Fowler,

Sir J. Fergusson said that no application had been received from the Dutch Government to be allowed to import coolies from British India to the sugar colonies of the Dutch. East Indies.

Postage to India and China.

Mr. J. MACLEAN asked the Postmaster-General whether, as

Mr. J. Maclean asked the Postmaster-General whether, as the Post Office saved £107,000 a year on the new East India and China mail contract, he proposed to make any reduction in the postage on letters to India and China.

Mr. Raikes.—I may inform the hon, member that the saving to which he refers is simply a reduction of the loss on the India and China mail services. The present postage rates will still leave a considerable deficiency between the expenditure and the receipts under this head which will have to be ture and the receipts under this head, which will have to be made good out of the general revenues of this country, of India, and the Eastern colonies; and I am not now prepared, therefore, to propose any reduction of the postage rates to India and China.

rupees and one rupee respectively. Teachers, Government servants, persons unable to earn their living, and immigrants for the first five years of residence are exempted. The tax is for the first five years of residence are exempted. The tax is not specially unpopular.

MAIL STEAMERS CALLING AT COLOMBO.

MAIL STEAMERS CALLING AT COLOMBO.

Sir R. Lethbridge asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether an ordinance had recently been passed by the Government of Ceylon admitting certain foreign mail steamers calling at Colombo to the status of men-of-war, a privilege denied to British mail steamers; whether that ordinance was opposed by the commercial member of the Legislative Council, by all the Native members, and by all the non-official members except one; and whether Her Majesty's Government had given any sanction to a measure passed by the official majority in opposition to the wishes of Majesty's Government had given any sanction to a measure passed by the official majority in opposition to the wishes of nearly all the non-official representatives of colonial opinion. Sir H. HOLLAND.—An ordinance was enacted at the end of last year by the Legislature of Ceylon, continuing during the subsistence of the Postal Convention with France of 1856, temporary ordinances which confer on French and German mail steamers in the ports of the colony and status of menof-war—a privilege which is not possessed by British mail steamers. Opinion in the Legislative Council was divided, as the hon member states. The ordinance was introduced at at the instance of the Home Government as regards the French vessels, in order to comply with the conditions of the Postal Convention of 1856, and, as regards the German vessels, Postal Convention of 1856, and, as regards the German vessels, in compliance with the request of the German Government that during the continuance of the Convention the mail steamers subsidized by them might be allowed the same privileges as those subsidized by the French Government.

ENGLISH TROUT EGGS FOR INDIA.—The Fishing Gazette states that Mr. W. T. Silk, of Burleigh Park Fishery, Stamford, recently shipped to India, for Major Hodgson, 10,000 English trout eggs, and hopes from these eggs to stock some streams in the Neilgherry Hills, in the South of India.

MR. CHARLES DU VAL'S TOUR.—Mr. Du Val is completing his final arrangements before leaving for his new undertaking—a tour of the East. He intends, however, making his journey to India, Burma, Straits Settlements, China, and Japan, all of which are to be included in his latest venture, viâ the Cape.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

OWING to the want of accommodation at Colaba the Gloucester Regiment, which is to relieve the East Yorkshire, will be split up into four departments, between Colaba, Deolali, Ahmedabad, and Deesa. Since June, 1885, the regiment has not been together.

CAPTAIN E. L. ELLIOT, D.S.O., having completed twenty years' service, six of which have been in the Staff Corps, is gazetted Major from the 22nd January, 1888.

COLONEL FILGATE, Accountant-General, in the Public Works Department, takes two years' furlough from the first week in July, and retires.

THE champion shot of the Native Army is Havildar Pal Singh, of the 29th Punjab Infantry—a good man from a good regiment. Since the year 1874 the 29th Punjab Infantry has completed ten annual courses of musketry, with the result that it has seven times been first on the list and three times second. Such a figure of merit speaks for itself.

In a resolution his Honour the Lieut.-Governor impresses very strongly on all officers the necessity of studying concise-ness in drawing up annual reports. The objects aimed at should be to convey the greatest amount of information in the fewest words possible, and the practice of stringing together extracts from reports of subordinates which might with advantage be summarised should be given up, and the introduction of un-necessary contentious matter be avoided.

An army circular notifies that the command pay of Lieu tenant-Colonels of Royal Artillery in Divisional and District and Station commands is fixed at the uniform rate of Rs. 300 and Station commands is fixed at the uniform rate of Rs. 300 per mensem. This change will only have effect from the dates on which each class of B command becomes vacant, when the command pay of Rs. 400 for that particular command will be reduced to Rs. 300, and the senior Lieutenant-Colonel of the commands on Rs. 200 will receive Rs. 300 per mensem. But the artillery command allowance at present drawn by the officers commanding the Bombay District, Oudh Division, and Hyderabad Subsidiary Force will be reduced to Rs. 300 per mensem from the date of the order, and the command allowances of the three senior Lieutenant-Colonels now on Rs. 200 will be advanced to Rs. 300 simultaneously. will be advanced to Rs. 300 simultaneously.

THE PUNJAB UNIVERSITY SCANDALS.

The inquiry into the Punjab University scandals was commenced at Lahore on the 24th January, before Mr. F. E. Elliot, District and Sessions Judge, Allahabad, President, and Mr. C. R. C. Kiernander, Deputy Auditor-General, Bombay. The Commissioners took their seats on the bench at eleven o'clock.

Mr. E. W. Parker appeared to presecute on behalf of Government, having been specially deputed for that duty. Mr. Larpet was represented by Mr. A. Bates.

Mr. Larpent asked that publication of evidence in newspapers should be deferred, and said that the evidence to be given for the prosecution might contain matters affecting him given for the prosecution might contain matters affecting him privately, and possibly be injurious. He also represented that the evidence should not appear at length from day to day, as the other witnesses reading it might be enabled to trim their evidence accordingly. The Court held that they could not help Mr. Larpent on this point, the inquiry being public.

The charges were then read out. They are included under three heads, and cover the allegations of bribery and misbehaviour on the part of Mr. Larpent in his capacity as a public servant. On each of the three charges Mr. Larpent pleaded not guilty.

The counsel for the prosecution proceeded to address the

The counsel for the prosecution proceeded to address the Court. He said:—"My remarks fall under four main heads. The first relates to that portion of the evidence which I propose to call which is of introductory and explanatory kind—Section 9 of the Evidence Act. This is necessary to put the Commission in possession of the actual state of things under which the circumstances set out in the charges happened, and which the circumstances set out in the charges happened, and which afforded an opportunity for their occurrence (Section 7 of the [Evidence Act) and to show motive and preparation (Section 8). The next three heads will deal with the evidence relating to the three charges. Some of this evidence relates to circumstances connected with the charges by way of cause, and all the charges will be proved by direct evidence upon facts alleged. Some further evidence of a corroborative kind will have to be given in order to show that the evidence itself will have to be given in order to show that the evidence itself is true and entitled to belief. It is matter of notoriety that Mr. Larpent for a long time has been in serious pecuniary difficulties. This is relevant as showing a motive for illicit gain, and Mr. Logan will establish it as well as the Calcutta Trades Association. There was a report on the subject to Trades Association. There was a report on the subject to Government some years ago, and a circular regarding a debt of Rs. 21,000 has recently been circulated among his creditors by the Trades Association. If Mr. Larpent's general and heavy indebtedness is not denied, it will be necessary to produce much evidence on the point. There is no desire to exaggerate its importance, but it forms a necessary prelude to the case. It is necessary in the next place to show the state of things which existed during Mr. Larpent's incumbency in the Registrarship in regard to the conduct of various examinations held by the University, apart from what took place in connection with the Law Examination held in December, 1886. It will be shown that the irregulari from what took place in connection with the Law Examination held in December, 1886. It will be shown that the irregularities connected with the final Law Examination of 1885, though proved generally, were not brought home to Mr. Larpent, because (1) that gentleman published the results without having them checked by any one else, (2) when the University authorities desired to check him afterwards, those returns of examiners to which suspicion pointed had disappeared. Thus the candidates who are said to have paid for improper assistance were passed and therefore made no complaint. This was ance were passed, and therefore made no complaint. This was prevented in the 1886 examination by the Vice-Chancellor's action referred to further on. The correspondence in the Registrar's Office will show that in one or both of the missing returns of examiners in written subjects the examiner had returns of examiners in written subjects the examiner had awarded marks on a wrong maximum, and Mr. Larpent had to increase the marks proportionately on these papers all through to get at the right figures according to the proper maxima prescribed in the regulations. The evidence alluded to and the evidence adduced on the second and third charges also will, I am instructed, show that the Law Examinations held in both 1885 and 1886 were attended by a system of wholesels being and convention on the rest of Mr. I according nations held in both 1885 and 1886 were attended by a system of wholesale bribery and corruption on the part of Mr. Larpent and those who acted for him, such as Gunda Singh. Whether this evidence is to be believed it is for the Commissioners to judge. It will be put in evidence that candidates (1) purchased information regarding the questions set before the examinations came on; (2) paid for permission to substitute papers for those given in at the examination hall; (3) paid in order to induce Mr. Larpent to tamper with the examiners' returns; and (4) had interviews and money transactions with Mr. to induce Mr. Larpent to tamper with the examiners' returns; and (4) had interviews and money transanctions with Mr. Larpent, Gunda Singh and others. In regard to these several matters, it will further be put in evidence that, owing to information received by the Vice-Chancellor through Mr. P. C. Chatterjee, an examiner, Churamani, a candidate, and others, that gentleman was induced to go down before the results were issued and check them. The Vice-Chancellor went down guddenly on beging completing about it to the that gentleman was induced to go down before the results were issued and check them. The Vice-Chancellor went down suddenly, on hearing complaints about it, to the Senate Hall. It was not that Mr. Larpent usually got him or others to sign the returns in pursuance of any reform. It was the practice in 1883 and 1884 to have the results signed by the Fellows of the University others than the Registrar. How far this practice was followed by Mr. Larpent the University record should show. The result of the Vice-Chancellor's action is said to have been that many who paid money to obtain improper favour eventually failed, and consequently mobbed Mr. Larpent, and complained to various people. Even then we should probably have heard nothing of Gunda Singh, the depository of the money to a large extent, if he had not played Mr. Larpent false. When he saw the game was up he stuck to the money. The failed candidates could not all, he said, buy Mr. Larpent, and pro-notes were given—some got pro-notes. When Mr. Larpent's other resources were exhausted, this strait to which he was reduced clenched the matter against him, and one of these promissory notes form the chief feature of the first charge. There is another (relevant under Section II., Clause 2 of the Evidence Act) the genuineness of which Mr. Larpent has admitted in a court of justice—Sandhe Khan v. Larpent. There are two others at least which witnesses say are genuine, but which are not in Mr. Larpent's ordinary handwriting. These were given after the two admittedly genuine ones, and when the desire of self-preservation had, it is to be inferred, grown more calculating and cautious.

"I may now turn," said Mr. Parker, "to specific matters or sen-preservation had, it is to be interred, grown more calculating and cautious.

"I may now turn," said Mr. Parker, "to specific matters forming the basis of the first charge. I cannot put the case in point more clearly than by using the words of the University authorities: 'This charge shortly stated is to the effect that Ram Saran Dass, being a candidate at the last Final Law Examination, having heard that persons who paid money to the Registrar, Mr. Larpent, could obtain a pass certificate, was induced to pay Mr. Larpent the sum of Rs. 1,500 as a bribe out of Rs. 2,500 agreed upon; but that, owing to the Vice-Chancellor having gone down suddenly to the Registrar's office and tested the abstract of results the Registrar was not able to and tested the abstract of results the Registrar was not able to pass him, and that on subsequently demanding back this money he got a pro-note from Mr. Larpent executed in his brother Pertab Singh's favour; Mr. Larpent promising at the same time to repay the balance in cash as soon as he got money for the purpose. Upon the second charge there is evidence which, it is believed, will show that Gunda Singh and his brother Sunt Singh have long that deal incomist Mr. Larpent brother, Sunt Singh, have long had dealings with Mr. Larpent. Mr. Larpent gave Sunt Singh office and promotion in Government service, and made use of him in private affairs of his own. He employed Gunda Singh in various ways. Gunda Singh had a printing press in the city, which was used for printing examination question papers, which largely leaked out through him. The third charge deals with another phase of the same or similar evidence to that falling under the of the same or similar evidence to that falling under the record."

After reading an analysis of the evidence to be gone through Mr. Parker's address closed.

The inquiry has not yet concluded.

It is stated that the question of handing over Sind to the Punjab Government is once more under consideration, and there is a prospect of the question being finally settled this

CHRISTIANITY IN UPPER BURMAH.

The Rev. J. A. Colbeck, S.P.G. missionary in Burmah, writes in the Mission Field a very interesting description of Upper Burman, writes in the Mission Field a very interesting description of Upper Burman. That newly-acquired region has no sea coast, being wedged between India and China, and is of about 200,000 square miles, half of which area belongs to the Shan States. "The literature of the country is very extensive, but chiefly confined to translations of Pali's works, Buddhistic, philosophical, and historical." Education, of its kind, is widely extended, but the "Burman is essentially imitative, not creative." The total number of exclasions for Mandalay is 5 968 that is one extended, but the "Burman is essentially imitative, not creative. The total number of ecclesiastics for Mandalay is 5,968, that is, one monk for every thirty of the people. Throughout the country, excluding the Shan States, there are 18,340 rulers over single monasteries, equivalent to what we might call the beneficed clergy of the land. Mr. Colbeck conjectures that of monks and priests of all kinds there are about 50,000. In Lower Burmah there is a population of 3,736,771, distributed over 16,583 towns and villages. There are no 3,736,771, distributed over 16,583 towns and villages. There are no Dissenters. All the boys and young men at some time wear the yellow robe, and live in the monastery. Mr. Colbeck entertains high hopes of the Christianisation of Burmah. "A Burman is very angry if a son or friend becomes a Christiau, but the anger is only hopes of the Christianisation of Burman. "A Burman is very augry if a son or friend becomes a Christiau, . . . but the auger is only transient." There have been for a couple of centuries Roman Catholics in Upper Burman, and now there are a bishop, eleven French priests, and two native priests. In the English Church thirty adults have been baptised since July, 1886. The China Inland Mission have one man, but chiefly for the Chinese there. The Wesleyans have sent up an experienced missionary from Ceylon. The American Baptists have one man and three ladies. The total missionary ministers of all bodies is twenty-one.

It has been decided by the local Government that the whole of Burmah shall be disarmed, and that, as a rule, firearms shall be possessed only by Government officials, not below the rank of the Thuggis, who are the officials employed in collecting revenue, and are entrusted with certain limited magisterial powers. This regulation will not apply to Europeans or Eurasians in certain outlying places.

MANUAL

COLLOQUIAL ARABIC

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide: First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics. Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in the Crimen; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidie, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr. Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so much to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruc-tion from the native teacher."—Saturday Review.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENEUM.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—MORNING POST.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and morehants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY NEWS.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—Overland Mail.

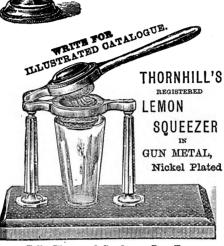

"The rules and explanations are clear, terse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." TRUBNER'S RECORD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students." – INDIAR DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done goog service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—

"VOICE OF INDIA. THE

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Hombay) a magasine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set farth in the native press. The Indian people naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a Lowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does $20 millions of our fellow-subjects. RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.) ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it...there is no tear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tatesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C. in C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter Review.

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 10th February; from Allahabadiand Madras to the 8th February; and from Calcutta to the 7th February.

THE Supreme Legislative Council met at Calcutta on Friday, Feb. 3rd, when the debate on the Petroleum Bill took place. Its particular feature was the unanimity with which all the non-official members, English and Native, supported the Government over the raising of the salt duty and the method of its enactment.

THE Chapter of the Order of the Indian Empire was duly held on Saturday, Feb. 4th, Lord Dufferin, as Grand Master, presiding. The ceremony of the investiture of the knights recently appointed to the Order was witnessed by five thousand persons.

LORD CONNEMARA'S visit to Calcutta, during which his Excellency was invested with the insignia of a K.G.C.I.E., was to last only a week.

LORD AND LADY REAY have returned to Bombay from Goa. The Grand Cross of the Order of Christ has been conferred on his lordship by the Portuguese Government to mark the occasion of the uniting of the Portuguese West of India Railway with the Southern Mahratta Railway. The Viceroy of Goa also telegraphed to Lord Dufferin his congratulations on the junction of the two railways.

THE Commander-in-Chief reached the Artillery Camp at Kushari on Friday morning, February 3, and inspected the tatteries at practice during the afternoon. On Sunday the camp broke up, and his Excellency drove into Lucknow. Sir Frederick Roberts reviewed the whole Lucknow garrison, when over 4,000 troops turned out before a large concourse of spectators.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Governor of the French Settlements ays a visit to Calcutta before starting for his new office at Réunion. M. Manès goes first to Bombay, and thence by rail to Calcutta.

THE HON. BASIL and Lady Victoria Blackwood have left for England by the P. and O. steamer from Calcutta.

THE final protocol and maps in connection with the Afghan Boundary Commission were signed by Lieutenant-Colonel Yate and the Russian Commissioner on the 4th inst., prior to their start on the return journey. The men of the escort from India were in good health, and the weather was fine and most favourable for marching.

THE home papers have been publishing a story that the Amir has applied to India for the services of an officer to reform his army. The statement has no foundation whatever.

THE Jam of Lus Beyla died on the 23rd ultimo.

THE Khyber Maliks with Colonel Warburton have reached Karachi, having had a very rough passage from Bombay. After a short stay at Karachi they go on to Quetta.

MR. CROSTHWAITE, who is now at Mandalay, has left on tour to the south-east, going over the line of the Mandalay-Tounghu Railway, which is reported to be making rapid progress. Sir George White is travelling Shan-wards to Fort Stedman and the hills beyond it. COLONEL LITTLE, who was so severely wounded by his Madrassi servant at Bhamo, is progressing favourably.

THE transfer of the working of the Bhopal State Railway, from the Great Indian Peninsula to the Indian Midland, has been postponed for the present, presumably because the Indian Midland is not yet far enough advanced we twards to be able to conveniently take it up. The East Indian Railway classification of goods has been adopted by the Iudian Midland line.

The case in which Mr. Larpent, late Registrar of the Punjab University, is accused of taking bribes in connection with the examinations of that institution during the past two years or so, has occupied the time of the Commissioners throughout the past week. The witnesses in support of the allegations have not all given their evidence yet, so that the matter is likely to absorb the attention of those deputed to investigate it for a considerable further period.

A DEPUTATION is shortly to visit Calcutta from Hyderabad to lay before the Viceroy in the name of the Nizam's Government the scheme for extending the railway to Raipur instead of to Chanda.

The Prime Minister of Hyderabad has offered to compromise the Rumbold claims against the State for three lakhs of hall sicca rupees. Sir Horace Rumbold, who has still to give his answer, has just started on his return to Athens.

THE RAJA OF SIKKIM begins to show signs of submission since the despatch of an armed working party towards his territory. He has written in humble terms to the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling to be allowed to visit him and explain his relations with Tibet, and why he remained so long in that country.

The proposals concerning the extension of the High Court of Oudh have not yet gone further than the India Office, but it may be taken for certain that, in the event of a separate bench being established at Lucknow, an additional judge will be brought on the strength of the Court at Allahabad.

A HEAVY snowstorm at Quetta has caused several casualties, many persons being frozen to death.

A FATAL accident, resulting in the death of sixteen persons, is reported from Delhi.

EXTENSIVE frauds in connection with the recent Matriculation Examination in Madras have been discovered.

OBITUARY.—The Rov. G. Bowen, Missionary, Bombay; Captain Broughton, 8th Hussars.

A New P. and O. Steamship.—On the 23rd inst. the largest steamship which has ever been constructed in Ireland—a vessel 466ft. in length and of 6,380 tons gross register—was handed over by her builders, Messrs. Harland and Wolff, of Belfast, to the owners, the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company. Her triple expansion engines indicate some 7,000-horse power, and she will be able to maintain sixteen knots at sea. She is commanded by Captain Hector, R.N.R. The Oceana has been fitted under the superintendence of the Chief Constructor of the Navy with gun racers, and other appliances, so that she could be equipped as a man-of-war on the shortest notice. She could carry 2,500 troops with ease. She is to leave London on March 9 with the colonial mails for Adelaide, and will proceed thence to Melbourne and Sydney, filled with a large number of first and second class passengers, for whose comfort luxurious provision has been made. Her dining saloons, her drawing-room, and smoking-rooms, in light oak and in walnut, have all been designed by Mr. Colcutt, the architect of the Imperial Institute, and these, with the sleeping cabins, roomy and well ventilated, fitted with folding lavatories, with spring mattresses and chests of drawers, leave nothing to be desired. Messrs. Harland and Wolff have a sister ship nearly completed for the same company named the Arcadia, to be employed in the same trade; and these, with the two equally large armed cruisers built at Greenock by Messrs. Caird and Co., the Victoria and Britannia, will form four of the finest vessels in this great company's large fleet.

NOTES

The telegram sent by the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, published in that journal yesterday, shows that the Native Press, which is agitating against the increase of the salt duties, can give no substantial reasons for the faith they pretend to hold as to the increased burden which the impost will have upon the poor. The real grumblers, as the correspondent points out, are the salt importers, who are dissatisfied in consequence of the sudden way in which the increase was notified. And this dissatisfaction has been echoed in the columns of the Anglo-Indian Press to hand by the Overland Mail.

DR. WALKER, formerly Inspector-General of Prisons in the North-West Provinces, gives statistics, quoted in the telegram, which are convincing enough of the inappreciable incidence of the tax on the poorest classes. If a Native can buy sufficient salt for one hundred days' consumption for one pie at present prices he cannot be said to suffer much from over-taxation. But the question affects the cattle of India too—lean kine enough already; and we take the liberty to doubt Dr. Walker's assurance that no serious injury will result if these are kept on a small allowance, or left to seek for what they require.

In the House of Commons in the discussion on Mr. S. Smith's amendment—when India was treated to a little more interest from honourable members than usual—the Anglo-Indians who spoke showed very clearly the fallacy of the argument that the tax fell with unjustifiable severity on the poor. Sir Roper Lethbridge, who objected to the increase, allowed that its incidence would be infinitesimal, and showed in a very sensible speech that a return to the Protectionist theories advocated in certain quarters was impossible, and that direct taxation in India only led to corruption and cheating of the Revenue.

Bur Sir Richard Temple gave the coup de grace to Mr. Smith in his description of that gentleman as a philanthropic pessimist and political Jeremiah. "His hon. friend chose to wear very dark spectacles through which to view the condition of the people of India, and therefore the picture which he saw was, of course, very dark. The hon. member's knowledge of India had been acquired in a winter's tour, and, having returned home, he now narrated a 'winter's tale.' Might he remind the hon. member that a tour of such short duration could not make a man exhibicient in regard to so vast an empire and population?" Nothing could have been better than this well-deserved, if somewhat hard hitting.

A FINANCIAL contemporary says:—"It is not generally known that India is developing an enormous export wheat trade to Italy. From 1832-S3 to 1886-7 the quantity imported has increased forty-fold, and now reaches between five and six million cwts. The Italian Government were compelled five years ago to abolish the 'grist tax,' owing to the disease engendered among the peasantry through the use of maize bread. But instead of a larger area hing thrown into wheat in the Peninsula the Italians began to import largely from India, whose wheat contains more gluten, and is better adapted for the manufacture of 'macaroni' than American wheat. It is curious that, on the contrary, our imports of Indian wheat have only increased fifty per cent. in the last five years, chiefly because the London Corn Exchange refuses to quote the grain as first-class, or, in technical language, 'clean.' Indeed, this body seems to conspire with the railway companies in giving America a preference both over the Indian and the British wheat-grower."

It is time, however, that something should be done to put a stop to the oft-repeated complaints as to the dirty condition in which Indian wheat is often delivered here. The agreement telegraphed as having been come to by the principal wheat exporting firms in Calcutta, both as regards wheat and linseed, ought to do considerable good, and raise the character and prices of Indian wheat and seeds in the home markets.

It is reported that the Conference which is to take place in India for the discussion of questions connected with veterinary and horse-breeding operations, will probably be held at Delhi early in April next. It will be attended by officers of the Remount and Horse-breeding Departments, as well as by the Secretary of the Revenue and Agricultural Department. The Provincial Governments have been invited to depute their respective Directors of Agriculture to the meeting; and it is understood that the opportunity will be taken to hold a consultation on the best method of introducing instruction in sciences connected with agriculture into the educational system of the country, as well as on other questions of minor importance.

Something must be done regarding the deficiency in horses required for cavalry purposes. A dismounted Dragoon, as Punch long ago remarked, much resembles a goose upon a turnpike road. At home complaints are being made as to the want of cavalry and artillery horses, but from a "Return" published in India it is stated that in the "Queen's Bays" there are 500 horses only to 650 men; in the King's Dragoon Guards, 600 men and 480 horses; Prince of Wales's Dragoon Guards, 600 men and 450 horses; Carabineers, 600 men and 500 horses; Princess Royal's Dragoon Guards, 650 men and 448 horses; Queen's Own Hussars, 650 men to 520 horses; King's Royal Irish Hussars, 600 men and 500 horses; and in the 21st Hussars, who have just arrived, the need of extra horses is still greater than any of those mentioned.

Surely the following statement, which has found its way into the Indian newspapers, cannot be true so far as the young efficer (who has just been gazetted to a cavalry commission) is concerned. The remarks as to the duty of the Government to provide liberally for the clever and loyal young officer must, of course, be endorsed by all who read them, and very little fear need be felt as to the Government not doing its duty in the matter:- "Prince Victor Dhuleep Singh is in considerable financial difficulties. Left in very straitened circumstances by the eccentric line of conduct which the Maharajah saw fit to adopt, the Maharanee battled bravely against the troubles which arose; but on her death matters went from bad to worse. She 'cut up' for a mere trifle. Creditors have now become impatient, and it has been necessary for the young Prince to 'consult a respectable solicitor.' present he is at Sandhurst, and doing well; but if proceedings are pressed against him, of course he will be requested to quit by the authorities. It is generally thought here that it would be a thousand pities for the Government to allow matters to arrive at this pass. an officer in the English army, the young Prince might do much to counteract the evil influence of his misguided father; and as he has remained loyal, despite the oitrepeated arguments and persuasions of the Maharajah, Ministers would act wisely in making some adequate provision for him. The money would be well spent. As the Queen's godson, moreover, his name should not be allowed to be dragged through the Bankruptcy Court. It is to hoped that the business will be taken up in high quarters, and that the Prince will be secured from further annoy-

What are Anglo-Indian parents to do with sons whom they cannot get into the Indian services? A military contemporary answers the question. Send the young gentlemen to Bechuanaland, where a promising opening is provided in the Methuen settlement under Government concessions. Colonel the Hon. Paul Methuen, C.B., and Captain the Right Hon. Lord Elibank, R.N., are patrons of the undertaking; and Colonel John Graham, 2, Waterloo-place, S.W., will be happy to hear from any intending settlers, and give all information.

Colonel Hay, Assistant Secretary, Military Department, and Mr. F. Wyman, member of the Bengal Council, died at Calcutta, Feb. 9.

(BY TELEGRAPH.) (Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 26.

An important and thoroughly practical contribution to the controversy regarding the incidence of the salt-tax has lately been published by the Pioneer newspaper, in the shape of a letter from Dr. Walker, formerly Inspector-General of Prisons in the North-Western Provinces. Dr. Walker states that so far back as 1864 he was led, in the course of his official duties, to consider and determine the quantity of salt required for issue in the prison dietary. By way of practically testing the question he had some hundreds of Natives waylaid on their return from purchasing their daily supplies from retail dealers. return from purchasing their daily supplies from retail dealers, and himself weighed the amount which each carried. He and filmself weighed the amount which each carried. He found too, that generally when a man was a regular customer of the dealer this pinch of salt was given without charge, and as a measure of discount on the prices of other articles purchased. Acting on these observations, he fixed the daily allowance of salt in the convict dietary at 100 grains per man. This scale has continued for the last 24 years, and as statistics show a has continued for the last 24 years, and as statistics show a low rate of mortality in the prisons of the North-Western Provinces Dr. Walker argues that experience proves that such a supply of salt is quite sufficient. He adds, as further evidence, that, while Native convicts will risk any punishment to procure tobacco surreptitiously, he has never heard of any attempt to introduce salt into a gaol. Accepting, then, the conclusion that men can maintain good health on a daily allowance of 100 grains of salt, he shows that for an expenditure of one pie a single man can at present prices purchase sufficient salt for 101 days; while a family of husband, wife, and three children can procure enough for 20 days. Dr. Walker does not touch the question of the supply of salt for domesticated animals, beyond saying that he has never seen evidence that any serious injury will result if they are kept on a small allowance, or even left to seek what they require. His figures, however, seem to put it beyond doubt, that the recent increase of the tax will have no appreciable effect even on the poorest classes.

beyond doubt, that the recent increase of the tax will have no appreciable effect even on the poorest classes.

This is the view taken by the Anglo-Indian and a portion of the Native Press. Several Native journals, however, maintain that the increased duty will fall heavily on the poor, but they do not bring any facts or figures to support this contention, and seem to have taken it up rather in a spirit of general opposition to the Government than from any belief in its truth. The against the leaves have not go for any leave have been The agricultural classes have not, so far as I have been able to discover, shown any signs of discontent, and the only grumbling that has made itself heard is that of salt importers, who object rather to the manner in which the increase was notified than to the increase itself.

The Bill to give effect to the Army Reserve scheme lately introduced in the Legislative Council by General Chesney is now published. It provides that the Reserve shall be divided into the active and garrison sections, members of the latter not being liable to service beyond British India without their consent. The Governor-General in Council is intrusted with the power of making rules for the regulation of the Power of power of making rules for the regulation of the Reserve forces. The Bil then provides that failure to attend when called out, without reasonable excuse, may be punished by a military or civil Court with imprisonment not exceeding one year; as may also the act of fraudulently obtaining pay contrary to the regulations. The measure is very short, but it clearly specifies the obligations of the Reserve soldier. Some objection has been taken on the ground that it does not refer to the Volunteers, but it may be doubted whether that subject could be appropriately treated in the present Bill.

last in discussing the vexed question of imprisonment for debt. last in discussing the vexed question of imprisonment for debt. Some two or three years ago the Government consulted the local administrations and judicial authorities regarding the propriety of altogether abolishing such imprisonment. The replies showed much difference of opinion, but the majority was against abolition. Thereupon Mr. Ilbert, then Legal Member of Council, proposed to confine the operation of the Debtors' Bill which he had introduced to the North-Western Provinces. But the Select Committee to which the Bill was referred was unable to account his view and preferred to Provinces. But the Select Committee to which the Bill was referred was unable to accept his view, and preferred to modify the measure, while making it applicable to the whole of British India. The result of this measure, as modified, will be to do away with imprisonment for debt only as regards women and debtors who are paupers, but not fraudulent. In all other cases the punishment is retained, but greater discretion is given to the Courts than they now possess, and they will no longer be obliged to commit a judgment debtor to prison whenever a decree-holder applies for such order. Moscoble explained the provisions of the Bill at some length, and Sir C. Elliott offered some criticisms, but refrained from mov-Sir C. Elliott offered some criticisms, but refrained from moving any amendments, so the measure will probably pass in its

The debate on the Calcutta Municipal Bill still drags its weary length along in the Bengal Council, and seems likely to last for many months. At the last meeting a proposal to allow the municipality to divert a portion of its funds to education was carried by a small majority. It is difficult to understand how the Council could have consented to such a proposal, in face of the fact that the sanitary state of Calcutta is still a disgrace to a civilised community and a standing danger to the whole world. For years past the corporation has been pleading poverty whenever its attention has been called to the imperathroughout the town and supply congenial breeding-places for cholera and fevers. Within the last few days a public inquiry into a lamentable and fatal case of typhoid, which occurred in one of the most populous parts of the European quarter, brought out clearly that it was due to the most obvious neglect by the municipality of some simple precentions. The health by the municipality of some simple precautions. The health officer stated, in giving evidence, that the staff of inspectors placed at his disposal was altogether insufficient, and that he had tried in vain to get it increased.

The chairman of the Municipal Connoil, who is also a mem ber of the Bengal Council, protested against the amendment, pointing out that roads, conservancy, and sanitation were the primary objects of municipal expenditure, and that until they had been sufficiently provided for educational expenditure should be postponed. Yet, in spite of this protest and the often-expressed opinion of many experts, the Council adopted the medium of the council of the council adopted the medium of the council adopted the amendment, and the Calcutta Corporation will now have one more excuse for deferring sanitary improvement until the force of Western opinion compels it to put its house in order, and make a vigorous attempt to stamp out cholera in its birth-

The Gaekwar arrived in Bombay on his return from Europe last Monday, and next day he reached Baroda, where he was accorded a most enthusiastic reception. The city was gaily decorated, and great crowds assembled to welcome their ruler.

The principal wheat-exporting firms of Calcutta have entered into an agreement which it is hoped will have the effect of stopping the complaints as to the dirty condition in which Indian wheat is often delivered in Europe. Henceforth the up-country seller will have a right as heretofore to deliver wheat containing 5 per cent. of foreign substances at contract price, or he may deliver 2 per cent. more subject to an equivalent deduction from the price. But if the wheat contains over 7 per cent. of admixture he will be mulcted according to a fixed scale, so as to make it his interest to purchase from the cultivators only the cleaner parcels. The agreement will also apply to the linseed trade.

Lord Dufferin will leave Calcutta for Simla towards the end of March, and it is doubtful whether he will return to the capital. There is some talk of getting up a public meeting of farewell before his departure, but the proposal has not yet taken a definite form.

RANGOON, FEB. 25.

The last official bulletin for Upper Burma contains nothing important. No material change has occurred in the condition of the province. Dacoity continues to be prevalent in several districts. The eastern portion of the Mandalay district has been disturbed by dacoit bands. Mr. Chill, a European police inspector, has been killed by dacoits near Alon, in the Chindwin Valley, and his body has not yet been recovered.

Much surprise was felt here at the intelligence that the Muggounghlaing police-station in the Tavoy-district, the most southerly portion of Lower Burma, had been attacked by dacoits and burned. Hitherto the Tavoy district has been among the most peaceable in Burma. It had not been affected by the disturbances in the Upper province. A band of some thirty men dressed as Shans, and armed with guns and spears, attacked the Muggounghlaing Police Court. Except the sergeant, all the Burmese police occupying the post bolted when the dacoits attacked. The sergeant and Mr. Ingram, of the Forest Department, who happened to be there, defended the station very pluckily, killing two dacoits and wounding others. Mr. Ingram was slightly wounded in the thigh. The dacoits finally fined the building by placing attack under it. finally fired the building by placing straw under it. Mr. Ingram and the sergeant succeeded in escaping while the ringram and the sergeant succeeded in escaping while the greater part of the dacoits were engaged in looting the adjoining village. This band is believed to have been composed of men coming from beyond the Siamese frontier. The local Government has received no further details, except that the dacoits are reported to have gone to the Amherst district. The military police have been sent in present of them.

Captain Raikes is now in the Kale Valley, where so far everything is quiet. The good result of his negotiations with the Chin chiefs is shown by the following facts:—Between the months of October, 1886, and March, 1887, twenty-seven villages in the Kale Valley were raided by the Chins, seventy-five villagers were killed, and 380 people were captured and read off to the Chin Hills. Since Captain Raikes began negotiations with the Chin chiefs there has not been a single raid into the Kale or Kuba Valleys. Some doubt is, however, now felt as to whether the present satisfactory state of affairs will continue, as the ex-Tsawbwa of Kale, who was allowed to escape from Mandalay, is reported to have reached the Taekon Hills. This tsawbwa, who is bitterly hostile to the British, has great influence among the Chins, and the chiefs will probably try to reinstate him and to drive out our nominee.

Captain Raikes' negotiations with the chiefs of the Yok-wachakas, an important Chin tribe, were unfortunately interrupted, owing apparently to a misapprehension on the part of Captain Eyre, Deputy-Commissioner of Pagan, who sent messengers inviting these chiefs to visit him instead of Captain Raikes. This proceeding caused considerable delay and inconvenience. The Chief Commissioner has, however, now directed Captain Raikes to carry on the negotiations with this tribe.

All intention of making a reconnoissance to Chittagong has been abandoned until after the next rainy season. At the close of the year a reconnoissance into the Chin Hills will proclose of the year a reconnoissance into the Chin Hills will probably be attempted, and, indeed, it will be necessary to open up a large tract hitherto never traversed by Europeans. It would be desirable on every ground that such an expedition should be accompanied by Captain Raikes as political officer. Major Macgregor, of the 44th Ghoorkhas, who is in military command of the district, would make a suitable commanding officer for such a column. His sturdy little soldiers are admirably suited for marching through the difficult hill country which will have to be traversed.

A gang of dacoits which had given much trouble was recently attacked at the village of Wangon, on the eastern bank of the Irrawaddy, north of the old frontier, by the mounted infantry under Lieutenant Nelson, of the 29th Madras Infantry. The dacoits were routed with loss; two were killed, including their leader, two were wounded, and a number of

The Kyoukse district, formerly so frequently disturbed, continues in excellent order under the charge of Mr. Rice, Deputy-Commissioner. It has been completely cleared of dacoits by the mounted infantry of the Rifle Brigade (the Prince Consort's Own), under Sir Bartle Frere, and a squadron of the 1st Madrag Tancors under Lieutenent Kerrich. The present Madras Lancers, under Lieutenant Kerrich. The present favourable condition of this district is unquestionably due to the cordial manner in which the civil and military authorities in it have worked together. Such co-operation is, unfortunately, not universal in Upper Burma.

THE TAXATION OF HEALTH, CLOTHING, AND LIGHT.

(Madras Mail.)

It would be doing the members of the Government of India an injustice to assume that they are not quite as alive as other people to the hardship involved in the taxation of health by means of the Salt Duty. Salt is essential to the health of means of the Salt Duty. Salt is essential to the health of human beings everywhere, and it is peculiarly necessary to the physical well-being of the fifth of the human race living in India, who are vegetarians. The people must have salt if they are to be protected against cutaneous and other diseases, and to regain their strength; yet the Government has seen fit to enhance the cost of this necessary of life by twenty-five per cent. A Bombay Native journal mentions that the price of salt has consequently been reject in Rombay to sixten score cent. A Bombay Native journal mentions that the price of salt has consequently been raised in Bombay to sixteen seers per rupee, a price without precedent; and states that there are at present many people living in Bombay who in days gone by purchased salt at the rate of sixty-four seers per rupee. The enhancement of the duty will not be felt by the well-to-do classes, so it is essentially of the dumb millions. We decline to suppose that the Government of India has inflicted the grievance with a light heart. Necessity, however, knows no law, and the philanthropy that would deter the members of the Government, as individuals, from adding one iota to the difficulties of existence of the vast mass of their indigent fellow-subjects has not been allowed to prevent the introduction of a measure which will fall heaviest on those who are least able to bear it.

But, while giving every credit to the Government of India

But, while giving every credit to the Government of India But, while giving every credit to the Government of India for good intentions, we cannot congratulate it on its courage. The poor man in India is very poor and very powerless; and the Manchester man is very rich and very powerful. The question arises which of the two can be, with the greatest safety to the Government, compelled to add to the revenue of India. A deficit stares the Government in the face, and must be met at once. But how is it to be met? There were two courses open to the Government. firstly, the easy one of raising the Salt to the Government, firstly, the easy one of raising the Salt Duty by a stroke of the Viceregal pen; and, secondly, the difficult one of reimposing the import duties on cotton goods, which even Mr. Fawcett said ought never to have been removed. The adoption of the former course would cause general, yet mild grumbling in India; but the proposal to adopt the latter course would make Lancashire mad. True, the concensus of Anglo-Indian and Indian opinion in India is almost unani-Anglo-Indian and Indian opinion in India is almost unanimously in favour of the wrong connected with the repeal of the cotton duties being remedied by the simple method of reimposing them, but "what would Manchester say?" The Government of India cannot be greater sticklers for the observance of free-trade principles than Mr. Fawcett was; nor as politico-economists can its members be greater purists than he was. It must be well aware that the Indian public is right when it says that, just as England exercises the right of making fiscal changes to meet her financial exigencies. so India should be changes to meet her financial exigencies, so India should be allowed a free hand in taxing herself in a manner agreeable to herself.

The sop that Mr. Gladstone first, and then Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury—in order not to be outdone by Mr. Gladstone—compelled India to give to "Manchester" has cost India a very large sum, and in the end has done Manchester no good that she can specify. In the five official years ending with 1881-82, the Government of India received by import duty on Cotton Goods and other articles (not including Liquors), £6,582,187, or, on an average, £1,316, 437 per annum; but in the four succeeding years, it received only £62,560, or, on an average, £15,640 per annum. It may be assumed that had the cotton duties been continued the revenue therefrom in the six years from 1882-83 to 1887-88 inclusive would have averaged achiefe. from 1882-83 to 1887-88 inclusive, would have averaged as high as in the immediately preceding years, or that it would have amounted to £1,316,437 per annum, or to about five and a-half million sterling for the whole period. The money was hadly wanted, but the Government was compelled to go without it simply because of the struggle for place and power in England. No one, we suppose, would have the effrontery to allege that the sill had a suppose. it was kindly consideration for the ill-clad or unclad millions of India that prompted the dead set of Lancashire upon one of the chief sources of India's income; but it must be almost a breach of trust, and to grave oppression on the part of political gladiators who stopped at nothing to gain their own ends. It may be too much to hope for, yet we cherish the hope, that some day the Government of India will be formed of men who will prove that the coverage of their coverience. who will prove that they have the courage of their convictions about that transaction, and would rather resign office in a body than continue to condone it, or to consent to tax the poor man's Salt rather than present a bold front to Lancashire.

Salt rather than present a bold front to Lancashire.

We have on several occasions advocated the imposition of an import duty on kerosine oil. The Times of India does not support, or condemn the proposal, but remarks:—"This commodity is reaching us in fast increasing quantities both from America and Batoum. It is argued that a moderate duty per gallon on imported oil would not yield a substantial revenue, and would only cause a fractional advance in the cost of the article in the Native bazaar, this being all the less a hardship inasmuch as foreign kerosine is at present underselling illuminating oils of Native production." It remains to be seen whether the new Finance Minister will go further than this, and admit in a practical way that in the cheap luminant they burn, rather than in the Salt they cat, the people of India may be made to contribute, without feeling it, a sensible addition to the revenue of their country. The poorer classes in this country are early birds, so as a duty on the oil would fall chiefly on the well-to-do classes who are tempted to turn night into day by well-to-do classes who are tempted to turn night into day by artificial means. No Lancashire would start up to protest against the duty, and America and Russia would continue to against the duty, and America and Russia would continue to compete for the rapidly growing demand for the oil in British and Native India. The quantity of the imports has increased by 50 per cent. in two years, and the oil has now gained so good a footing in the country, and is so comparatively inexpensive, that it can well bear moderate taxation.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPHS. (Bombay Gazette.)

The Administration Report of the Telegraph Department The Administration Report of the Telegraph Department for 1886-7 bears testimony to growth in the operations of the Department, but it is evident that the Telegraph does not yet play as important a part as it should do in the operations of trade in India. A little more than two and a-half millions of paid telegrams were despatched during the year. This was an increase of nearly a quarter of a million. But the proportion of messages sent on Government account was very considerable, nearly half a million of this class being sent last year. They are paid for, it is true, and though paying for a Government. They are paid for, it is true, and though paying for a Government message is much the same thing as taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another the system is supposed to check a too free resort to the Telegraph on the part of Government offices. It might be profitable to inquire whether enough has been done to keep these messages within proper dimensions. Some of them are said to have been of great length, and of course it costs money to telegraph for the State, as it does to telegraph for private senders. This the Government recognise when they have to send messages beyond the frontier. For the purposes of foreign State messages, we are told, in order to keep down charges, an abbreviated word code is used, by which considerable reductions in cost are effected. Prolixity in report writing has of late been severely discouraged by the Government. It might be worth while to pay attention to the possibility of discouraging prolixity in telegraphing, and the Government must not be deterred from this by assuming that because they own the lines the despatch of State messages costs them nothing. The public may not find it easy to believe that the revenue due to inland messages sent on State account is very little below that due to private traffic, the former being 33.55 per cent. of the whole, and the latter only 37.63. With foreign telegrams the proportions are very different, the private messages representing 27.19 per cent. of the revenue, and the State messages only 1.63. Has the economising code which the State employs when it uses other lines had anything to do with the small proportion of foreign messages which the Government despatches? The private traffic, as we have said, does not grow as it might do if the trading classes could fall in as easily with the use of the Telegraph as they have with that of the Post Office. Since 1882, when the present tariff came into use, the private messages have grown only 41½ per cent. in number and 31 per cent. in value, notwithstanding that the number of telegraph offices has more than doubled in the interval. The tone of the report is one of disappointment, but too much should not be made of the fact that low rates, and the various privileges which the service we were carrying letters three thousand miles for three-farthings in India long before the Post Office, as an organisation serving every class, would not have existed in India. One noteworthy feature in the report is the evidence it gives of the slowness with which the teleph

THE CALCUTTA MINT. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

The proposal to abolish the Calcutta Mint is a bitter pill for the Calcutta folks to swallow. If the operation were rewarded with a sweetmeat after it, they might, like all good children, be cajoled into acquiescence. But the sweetmeat is prominently wanting in this case, and the consequence is that Calcutta persists in being naughty. The latest exhibition of temper is from the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Defence Association, and takes the form of a memorial against the closing of the Mint. The Association remark that the proposal has arisen from purely accidental circumstances, which ought not to be considered in the decision of such a serious question. The Mint was indeed doing nothing when the Vandals of Finance Commission pounced upon it, but its inactivity was purely temporary, and not nearly sufficient to justify the conclusion that it was useless for imperial purposes. Its necessity is a matter of history, for during the famines of 1866 and 1874, and later on during the Afghan War of 1878, the Mint was buslly engaged in providing the sinews of war; and even so late as last year, it turned out three hundred and eighty lahks of silver coin. Then, again, it is pointed out that "Calcutta is the natural market of the produce of more than half the total population of India. Its trade must always be greater than thatof Bombay, for Calcutta has special products for which Bombay has no equivalent." This comparison, we confess, does not strike us very forcibly, and is odious, besides being incorrect,—for the trade of Bombay is undoubtedly larger, notwithstanding all the pretensions of the Palatial City. It is true that "the Calcutta Mint has to supply the whole of this portion of India with the necessary coinage," but what we believe the Finance Committee say is that Bombay can do so too, besides supplying herself. If the Defence Association can show that their opponents are wrong, then their claim will doubtless commend itself to reasonable people. But to institute absurd comparisons and to uphold expensive institu

INDIAN FINANCE. (Times of India.)

At the present time, when the Government of India has been compelled to increase the tax on salt and devise a new tax for petroleum, and when a new budget is about to be published, it may be profitable to review the financial administration of the past five years. At the close of 1883 Major Baring was succeeded as Finance Minister by Sir Auckland Colvin, a very able man and a very brilliant man, who, however, had done able man and a very brilliant man, who, however, had done nothing to show his capacity for the management of the finance of a vast Empire. He had not studied, like Mr. Wilson, the theory and abstract science of economics, nor, like Mr. Laing, was he a business man acquainted with the details of commerce. He had not, like Sir Richard Temple, as Secretary to two Finance Ministers, become familiar with the work of the Financial Department; nor, like Sir John Strachey, has he shown during his official carear any sign that he took an intershown during his official career any sign that he took an inte rest in financial problems. Sir Auckland Colvin was appointed Finance Minister only because his views regarding Egypt did not coincide with those of the Ministry, and they were desirous of removing him from the land of Pharaoh. Then cabals of party, and not the needs of the Indian Empire, determined his appointment. Considering that he did not know the alphabet of the subject when he entered the office, it is not surprising that his Budgets and statements displayed more literary skill than knowledge of economics or finance. The first statement was an essay of considerable skill, but it postponed the solution of every financial problem. "Questions," he wrote, "have arisen, for example, regarding the License Tax wrote, "have arisen, for example, regarding the License Lax and the Stamp Duties, which, during the ensuing year, will require full consideration. But it would, in my judgment, be premature and injudicious to attempt at this moment a solution of them." The following affords grim reading at the present moment:—"The general forecast of my predecessors has so far been eminently justified. Results have shown that notwithstanding the large remissions of salt and customs and other revenues in 1882-83, amounting in round figures to three millions (conventional sterling), and in the face of a falling-off in the net opium revenue of the ensuing year of £1,378,400, as compared with the revised estimate, the revenue and expenditure balance themselves without the necessity of recourse to any starving or material reduction of any of the public services." At the time we stated that the increased consumption would not at all balance the loss of revenue, but the Financial Department, as is their wont, found by elaborate figures that "the increase was considerable" and "is still progressive." It is very striking how figures in a financial statement always do is very striking how figures in a financial statement always do support the policy of the hour. Sir Auckland Colvin closed his first Budget Statement with the following summary of its main features:—"I. The consumption of salt continues to show a satisfactory increase." II. "The year 1883-84 has been one of great financial prosperity, and the Revised Estimates show a surplus of £271,400, notwithstanding the additional charges above referred to." III. "The surplus of 1884-85 is charges above referred to." estimated to be £319,300."

The history of Indian finance is the chronicles of surpluses which are seldom realised. In his second Budget Statement Sir Auckland Colvin had to write:—"The past year, so far as can be seen on the Revised Estimates, and until its accounts are finally closed, has presented us, not with the surplus of £319,300, but with a deficit of £716,200." The public were informed that, like all deficits, the deficit of 1884-85 was due "to abnormal losses and charges." The norma receipts were equal to the normal expenditure. The Chancellor of the Indian Exchequer even went so far as to congratulate himself on the figures of a deficit, "for the constant and steady increase in other branches of our revenue has enabled us to compensate in a large measure for the disagreeable results which have awaited us on the estimates made under the several heads I have specified." Sir Auckland Colvin again justified the reduction of the salt tax and the revenue of the import duties in the following emphatic words:—"The expectations of my predecessors who believed that the normal and healthy increase of revenues would be found to balance the ordinary expenditure, and in that confidence abolished the import duties and lowered the salt tax, have been fulfilled." The salt tax has again been raised, and India now sadly needs the three-quarters of a million sterling which Lord Ripon sacrificed to please an Influential party at home, who, in spite of their sentiments about free trade, still tax Indian produce annually to the extent of three millions sterling. At the time we had the courage to declare that that reduction was due to his love of the human race. The next Budget, no doubt, will prove by an array of figures that it was a grave blunder, and every leading official will support the statement. In spite of a grave deficit, in spite of the fact that money was urgently required for our frontier railways, no attempt was made to remodel the License Tax, or in any way increase the revenue of the country. However, the evil day could not be long po aro rees. The speech introducing the Bill was clever and epigrammatic, but unfortunately finance in modern times is a science, and does not require clever epigrammatic handling but scientific treatment, and can only be dealt with by being appreciated in the scientific spirit. The abolition of the import duties he again defined by an inaccurate statement and a novel theory. He declared that the lurden of the import duties, like the burden of the salt duties, fell upon the masses, and that retaining them would have given the Government too great a surplus, and so have led to extravagance. For many years to come India is not likely to be led into extravagance from that cause. If the six millions lost up to date by their remission had been spent in putting the Empire in a proper state of defence, there would have been no Income Tax and no need of increasing the salt duty.

In 1886, Sir Auckland Colvin published his third Budget in the Government Gazette. The estimated surplus of £319,300 for 1881-85 was converted into a deficit of £386,446. The Budget Estimates for 1885-86 presented a surplus of £508,000; the Revised Estimates showed a deficit of £2,890,000, which is entirely due to the excess expenditure caused by the military preparations of the year, increased political expenditure, and the cost of the expedition to Burma. But the Supreme Government must of ought to have known that there would be an increased military expenditure, and the blunder of Lord Lytton and Sir John Strachey ought to have warned them as to underrating the cost of the Burma expedition. It was ludicrous to estimate, as the Government did, that the cost of that expedition would only be £270,000. Sir Auckland Colvin is evidently a man of sanguine temperament, for, in spite of a deficit of £2,890,000 in 1885-86, the Budget Estimates for 1886-87 presented a surplus of £182,800. The Financial Statement of 1887-88 showed a deficit of more than a million, or, to use the euphonious language of the Budget, "The deficit which would have otherwise occurred in the Revised Estimates of 1886-87 and the Estimates of 1887-88 have been met by transfer to loan charges against the Famine Insurance Grant the sum of £1,049,400 and £1,248,000 in these two years respectively. The time has now come when it is impossible for the Financial Department by any amount of ingenuity to manufacture a surplus. From the days of Major Baring we have declared there was no potential surplus, and facts have justified us. The Government of India, though they must have known that they were bound to meet large and exceptional expenditure, were content to live on in a hand-to-mouth fashion. Three years ago it would have been wiser to have boldly stated that special provision was needed.

THERE are at present upwards of 15 lakhs of maunds of salt in bond in Calcutta, including 53 lakhs of Liverpool salt, the rest being French, Italian, and country salt. The total of Liverpool salt is, say, 20,000 tons, while the amount in ships on the river, and cleared before Jan. 15, may be set down at 50,000 tons.

SPEAKING at the annual distribution of prizes at the Oriental Institution in Calcutta, Sir Steuart Bayley referred to the demoralisation visible among the rising generation, strongly emphasising the danger arising therefrom to the stability of society, and pointing out that the only hope of counteracting the evil lay in the influence, example, and advice of the teachers.

A MEETING of the Senate was held in the Senate House, Calcutta, on the 2nd inst., for the purpose of discussing the "gown question." After a long discussion on the subject it was eventually decided that the gown should be black. It was also decided that this resolution should come into force next year (1889), so that the graduates that appear at the ensuing Convocation should wear the usual blue gowns.

THE Pioneers have now reached Siliguri, where the Deputy Commissioner has arranged for the collection of supplies transport. The regiment has 55 miles further to go to reach the Rilli, and will do the distance in five marches. A wing of the Derbyshire Regiment at Dum-Dum is to be held in readiness to join the Pioneers if necessity should arise for such a step.

THE Englishman states that telegrams have been received from Dundee announcing that the Jute Mills there are going on short time, but the news is looked upon as of doubtful character by those who are in the best position to judge. It is thought that the telegrams are probably intended to depress the jute rates in the Calcutta market, as the industry is in a flourishing state, and it is improbable that the mill-owners would combine in this way at such a time when they refused to do so under the pressure of adversity. The present situation in the trade is marked by large extensions of the mills, and by the re-opening of long closed works.

The Lieutenant-Governor at the last meeting of the Benga Legislative Council drew attention to the slow progress—if i can be called progress—that had been made with the Municipa Consolidation Bill. Only four out of 400 sections had been dealt with up to the present, and at the current rate of working some 200 meetings would have to take place before the measure could be passed. Long speeches appear to be the order of the day among the opposition, and Sir Steuart Bayley's remarks seem particularly pertinent. On Feb. 4 it was resolved that the raising of the number of Commissioners from seventy five to eighty, or reducing it to sixty, was inadvisable. The proposal to give votes to graduates was also negatived.

The Englishman says:—The discussion regarding the refraction of Indian wheat has advanced a little further by the publication of a fresh budget of correspondence, including a letter from Messrs. Ralli Brothers. The ultimate object all parties have in view is to displace American wheat by Indian wheat in England; but the impediment in the way is differently stated by the various parties who are interested in the shipments from Calcutta. The Calcutta shippers, who in their turn declare that they act under compulsion of the merchants in England, insist, when buying wheat from up-country dealers, on making a 5 per cent. deduction for impurities, no matter how clean may be the samples. Consequently the dealer takes care that that percentage of impurity is attained; and if it be that the wheat comes to him clean from the cultivator, he at once mixes it with the requisite proportion of dirt and inferior grain. The simple remedy of selling each consignment on its merits is impracticable, because, of the three parties to each transaction, the English merchant, the Calcutta shipper, and the up-country dealer, no one will rely on the other two, and the difficulty is much complicated by charges of bribery. The Agricultural Department has busied itself with measures to clean and test the grain independently; but over and above the difficulty of satisfying both the shipper and the dealer, it turns out that the machines cannot sift the wheat when it is mixed with other grains of the same size and weight. Messrs. Ralli Brothers have sent to Europe a sample of wheat cleaned down to three per cent., to be sold on its merits; and should the result of the experiment be encouraging, a demand at paying rates for grain of the improved quality may arise. But in any case it is slow work to introduce such a change in an established trade; and it must be remembered that the conditions of the problem are complicated by the fact that, to a large extent, the grain is sold to the merchants in England before it is bought from the up-country d

Mr. Jehangeer, the son of the late Sir Cowasjee, had been in correspondence with the University authorities for some time past, urging the desirability of removing the statue from the Sir Cowasjee Jehangeer Hall and placing it in some conspicuous place near the building, where it could be viewed by the public. Mr. Jehangeer undertook to bear all the expenses of the removal of the statue, and the University authorities, after a careful consideration of the matter agreed with his after a careful consideration of the matter, agreed with his proposal. The statue, which is mounted on a basement constructed of blue stone, is the work of the celebrated sculptor, Mr. Woolner, and represents a faithful likeness of the deceased, so well known for his benevolence and public charities. The statue in its present position forms an excellent centrepiece to the garden. We hear that a movement will shortly be made requesting Government to remove the several statues located in the Town Hall to some conspicuous places on the Esplanade.

BURMA.

RANGOON, FEB. 7.

The summary received from Upper Burma reports that Bhamo and the Ruby Mine districts are quiet, also Mandalay town. There were a few small dacoities in Myadaung, several in Shwebo, and four in the Mandalay districts. The Sagaing district is quiet. In Ava district the Woon attacked two dacoit Bohs, and shot one. Dacoity is somewhat prevalent on the western border of the Kyouksay district. In Myingyan there were five dacoities. Dacoity is also prevalent in Yamethen and part of Meiktila. In the latter district dacoits murdered the Thoogyee of Tawma, and carried off four guns and some revenue. Part of the gang was pursued by the police. Two dacoits and four guns were captured. A large RANGOON, FEB. 7

TROOPS IN BURMA.

Mr. Slage asked the Under-Secretary of State for India if he would supply to the House details of the number of troops which had been employed in the operations connected with the pacification of Upper Burma to the end of 1887; also the total cost of those operations, so far as it could be ascertained up to that time.

Sir J. Gorst.—The number of troops employed in Upper Burma has been continually fluctuating. The greatest was in February, 1887:—British, 6,781; Native, 21,078—total, 27,859. At the end of 1887 it was:—British, 3,791; Native, 14,275—total, 18,066. The extra army charges in Upper Burma were:—1885-86, Rx.605,000; 1886-87, Rx.1,160,000; 1887-88 (estimated), Rx.1,350,000. Total to the 31st of March, 1888, Rx. 3,115,000.

INDIAN FINANCE.

Mr. S. Smith moved an amendment to the Address regretting the deficit threatened in the Indian Budget and the proposal to raise the salt tax, urging greater economy in the proposal to raise the sait tax, urging greater economy in the administration of Indian revenue, and calling upon the Government to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the government of India. He enlarged at great length upon the poverty of the Native Indians and the hardships they would suffer by an increase of the salt tax, and advocated giving to the Indian people the right of representation in their ing to the Indian people the right of representation in their government.

Mr. SLAGG seconded the amendment.

Sir R. TEMPLE complimented Mr. Smith upon his speech, but pointed out that it was impossible that in a winter's tour he could have ascertained the true feelings of the natives of India. He could only have obtained his information from the higher class of natives, who were eager to obtain for them-selves the places and emoluments now held by Europeans, and he denied that the people were in such a state of poverty, or that the salt tax and the land tax were so burdensome as was alleged. If a Commission were appointed, its scope should be specifically limited to an inquiry (1) whether economy can be effected, (2) as to native representation, and (3) as to the substitution in some degree of native agency for European.

Sir W. Plowden eulogised the bravery, fidelity, and gallantry of the natives, and thought considerable economies might be effected in the army services and the civil administration

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE agreed with the amendment, except that part of it referring to the salt tax, which he suggested should be withdrawn, and advocated an exhaustive, impartial, and independent inquiry, which, he said, ought to be held on the spot, where native evidence can be obtained, and not by a Parliamentary Committee.

Sir J. Gorst disclaimed any responsibility on the part of the Government for the threatened deficit. It was caused, he said, by the expenditure in Upper Burma, by the increased army charges, by the falling-off of the opium revenue and the railway receipts, and by the fall in the exchange. But the recurring deficits of the last 13 years need not cause any anxiety, for if it had not been for exceptional charges last year, such as those if it had not been for exceptional charges last year, such as those connected with the conversion of the 4 per Cent. Railway Stock to Three-and-a-Half per Cent., there would have this year been a large surplus. Dealing with the Indian Debt he pointed out, by reference to figures, that although the entire debt, including money borrowed for railways and public works, has largely increased, the ordinary debt had considerably decreased. As to the Salt Tax he thought the views of Mr. S.

Smith were exaggerated. The vernacular Press supported it, and although the Secretary of State was not enthusiastic in its favour the Government of India had no alternative but to inrease it. With regard to the appointment of a Royal Commission he pointed out that a Public Service Commission appointed by the late Government had been holding an inquiry in India, and their report, which would be shortly published, would receive every attention at the hands of the Government.

Sir U. KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH disclaimed for the late Government responsibility for any increase in the Army charges; and while sympathising with the amendment, declined to support it in the absence of sufficient information.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

Mr. Slage asked the Under-Secretary of State for India, whether he would supply the House with details of the cost up to date, of the railway from Sukkur to Sibi; and also of the railways known respectively as the Scinde-Pishin line and the line through the Bolan Pass; also the estimated cost of the extension by means of tunnelling to Chaman.

Sir J. Gorst.—The cost of the line from Sukkur to Sibi was Rx.1,293,710, exclusive of Rx.294,941, the cost of the Sukkur bridge. The cost of the Scinde-Pishin line was Rx.4,055,603; of Bolan Pass line Rx.875,711; of Killa Abdullah branch Rx.48,351; of extension with tunnelling to Chaman Rx.1,408,697. The total cost of all lines and branches was Rx.8,006,715. Chaman Rx.1,408,697. T branches was Rx.8,006,715.

BEDS FOR THE INDIAN ARMY.

Mr. Bradlaugh asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether coir fibre beds were used for the Indian Army, and for how long they had been so used; whether the use of coir fibre for beds instead of straw was less costly; and whether the authorities and men were alike satisfied.

Sir J. Gorst.—The Secretary of State is aware that coir fibre is used for beds in the Indian Army. Its use is a matter of local administration within the discretion of the Government of India, and the Secretary of State has no official information as to its advantages.

INDIAN TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

Mr. King asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he would lay upon the table a copy of the despatch of the Secretary of State with reference to the block in promotion and other grievances of the Telegraphic Department in India; and other grievances of the Telegraphic Department in India; whether any officers of the department had as yet accepted the offer for retirement made in that despatch; whether, under the system of grading instituted by that despatch and the abolition of the privilege hitherto in favour of officiating promotions being from grade to grade, many officers were mulcted of a large percentage of their emoluments while the Government saved a very large sum; on what grounds permanent promotions were fixed by the despatch to be made only twice a year, on the 1st of April and the 1st of October, and whether he was aware of any precedent for such a provision in any other service of the Crown; whether the fixing of the 31st of March as the latest date for the submission of retirements had practically operated to take away the inducements for retire practically operated to take away the inducements for retirement in nearly all the cases, if not in every case, where retirement under the regulations of the despatch would have offered ment under the regulations of the despatch would have offered any advantage; and whether, in the circumstances, the Government would reconsider its proposals.

Sir J. GORST.—(1) Yes, if the hon. member will move for it, I will lay it on the table. (2) None. (3) No officers are damaged, as the rights of all existing officers are safeguarded. (4) No such provision is made in the despatch. It was introduced by the Government of India, but no reasons for it have been communicated to the Secretary of State. (5) The date, the 31st of March, was fixed to give every officer ample time for consideration. The Secretary of State is not aware that the inducement to retire has been taken away thereby. (6) The Secretary of State will wait till the 31st of March before further Secretary of State will wait till the 31st of March before further

THE AFGHAN BOUNDARY QUESTION.

The account of the final negotiations by Sir West Ridgeway have been printed in a Blue-book which was issued on the 20th inst. correspondence relates in detail the negotiations between Russia and England concerning the Afghan frontier and the actions of the commissioners. Writing to Lord Salisbury from St. Petersburg on July commissioners. Writing to Lord Salisbury from St. Petersburg on July 22, 1887, Sir Robert Morier notified the signing of the fourth and final protocol of the conferences, and expressed his firm conviction that the successful issue of the negotiations was undoubtedly due to the great ability displayed by Sir West Ridgeway, to his grasp of the materials he had to deal with, to his tact and conciliatory spirit, and, above all, to the conviction he inspired of his perfect straightforwardness and fair dealing. Nevertheless, continues the Ambassador, the Blue-book affords a curious insight into the methods of Russian diplomacy, and shows, moreover, the shifts we are reduced to by our fatal habit of neglecting points of vital importance till too late. On reaching St. Petersburg at Eastertide, a year ago, our Commissioner found them altogether disinclined to reopen negotiations at any price. It required the intervention of the British Ambassador to get the discussion started. Next, Russian diplomacy objected to a consideration It required the intervention of the British Ambassador to get the discussion started. Next, Russian diplomacy objected to a consideration of the matter under dispute by the light of the evidence already recorded; and this obstacle had also to be surmounted. Then, when the evidence examined turned out favourable to our contention and unfavourable to theirs, the Russian officials tried all they could to discredit it and to minimise it importance. But directly we showed an inclination to yield in one quarter, M. Zinovief shifted the position he had hitherto held. With much plausibility, as Sir West Ridgeway remarks, he declared that unless we would yield on both points the two Governments must agree to differ, each having its hands free in the future

But the example here afforded of the evasions resorted to throughout the dispute by the other side is by no means the only point to be noticed. We ourselves hardly show to much better advantage in another way. The utmost that can be said is that our Commissioners noticed. We ourselves hardly show to much better advantage in another way. The utmost that can be said is that our Commissioners made the best of a bad case; but why it should have been a bad one demands consideration. Why was it requisite to repair the results of ignorance by constant makeshifts, by endless withdrawals from positions at first believed to be tenable? Simply because the Russians knew what they wanted, and meant if possible to get it; whereas we were undecided both in knowledge and purpose. The boundary of Afghanistan still remains to be defined in the regions about the Upper Oxus. The Russians can challenge a settlement in this direction whenever it suits their convenience. If the boundary line already delimited is liable to a further revision, in order to secure what we want to the eastward, or perhaps to retrieve mistakes that have yet to be detected, the Ameer's complacency may show signs of wearing out. The time has really come for Englishmen to take a serious view of their responsibilities in Afghanistan. Let it be understood in the first place that under no circumstances can we permit encroachments first place that under no circumstances can we permit encroachments on the frontier already marked out. And having once so decided, let on the frontier already marked out. And having once so decided, let us abide by the decision.

The Afghan Ameer's letter to the Indian Viceroy is a masterpiece of polite yet effective composition. Though volumes have been published about the divagations of the Afghan Boundary Commission, it has been left to Abdur Rahman Khan to give us the sum and conclusion of the whole matter in language exactly suited to the subject. With great sagacity the Ameer waited for full particulars before expressing an opinion on the benefits and advantages likely to accrue to him from the cession of Afghan territory to the Russians. "I personally impressed the Ameer," says Sir West Ridgeway, "with the necessity of making concessions, but his Highness declined to commit himself. But when at last "at a very fortunate time" the Ameer learns the precise terms of the settlement he sums up the situation with admirable lucidity. The settlement is worthy of praise, and is the cause of precise terms of the settlement he sums up the situation with admirable lucidity. The settlement is worthy of praise, and is the cause of happiness. Who but the English could have untied with the fingers of excellent measures the knots of discussion? who but they would have traversed so many long and difficult stages on the noble steed of minute thought? And it is manifest, adds the Ameer, that I also shun insincerity, and am better than the former rulers of my fortunate country. What language could more fitly express a sound and acceptable opinion as to the result of this prolonged dispute?

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

The standard of novel writing has never been authoritatively The standard of novel writing has never been authoritatively fixed. With some persons—possibly they form the majority—the plot is everything. Startling disclosures, thrilling adventures, blood-curdling dangers, these are the sine qua non of popular works of fiction. This is the school of which Mr. Rider Haggard is the chief apostle; others more thoughtful are more inclined to accept polished diction and finished perfection of style as virtues which make amends for any lack of demonstrative virgues or feesing interest—these take Johnson's dramatic vigour or fascinating interest—these take Johnson's "Rasselas" as their ideal of novelism. Others again, indifferent in a degree to plot and finish, love to dwell on the charms of sagacious delineation of character. They are content to linger amidst a world of fiction, where people talk and act and think as do their namesakes in the land of the living. These are the worshippers of "Adam Bede" and the authors who follow in the same footsteps the same footsteps

Miss (is it Miss?) Crawford belongs to the last-mentioned school of fiction. There is little, if any, of melodramatic plot in her works. Here and there a telling situation rises up before the reader, but its appearance is natural; there is nothing of the deus ex machina about it. There is nothing forced in the little of the deus ex machina about it. in its introduction; the true interest lies in the careful thought displayed in the portraits which form the warp and woof of the tale. Take, for instance, the work under consideration. "Saracinesca" is simplicity itself in the way of sideratior. "Saracinesca" is simplicity itself in the way of development. Two men and two women are constantly endeavouring to thwart one another—by couples, of course. Lovers are and always will be the groundwork of all attempts to depict modern society; but the skill with which this quartette is handled is masterly in the highest degree. Place au dames. The lady of the tale, how charming she is! how full of fire! how careful as to her actions! how noble in every thull of fire! how careful as to her actions! how noble in every thought, word, and deed! and, withal, inspired with like passions, failings, and weaknesses which fall to the share of every daughter of Eve! Her rival, again, is an exact counterpart. Handsome, vain, thoughtless, presumptuous, she fancied her wealth and charms would carry all before her. And the result? Just what might have been expected. She fell a prey to the first adventurer who had skill enough to flatter, impudence appared to finisher and sufficient went of principle to expected. enough to frighten, and sufficient want of principle to ensnare. Thus much for the women folk. The men are painted with an equally skilled hand: one reserved, pensive, honourable, mistrustful of himself; at every turn he inspires confidence and awakens admiration; his every thought is upright, straightforward, and considerate. How different from the fourth of the party! Ignoble by birth he was ignoble in action; mean by descent he was mean in spirit; unprincipled, he had no hesitadescent he was mean in spirit; disprinciples, he had no nesteation in sacrificing the principles of others upon the altar of his own ambition. Antipathy increases at every turn, and, as following the instincts of life, he falls from bad to worse; the downward course is watched with aversion, and his final discomfiture received with delight.

This brief analysis will serve to show that "Saracinesca" should rank high in public estimation. It is difficult to lay it aside, because it achieves the highest aim and object of fiction, in so far as the reader is identified with the characters of the tale, and parts with them with regret—as losing personal companions and individual friends. We shall gladly welcome the promised continuation of this fascinating flight of fancy.

WATCHED BY THE DEAD.†

Mr. Proctor, of astronomical notoriety, has done good service in his masterly analysis of Dickens's "Mystery of Edwin Drood." Contrary to the usual verdict of the great novelist's admirers, the writer, in company with Longfellow, holds that it is "certainly one of Dickens's most beautiful works, if not the most beautiful of all." It is, of course, obvious at the outset, that criticism in regard to an unfinished composition at best somewhat hazardous: the termination might have been at best somewhat hazardous; the termination might have been so different to what is anticipated. Especially does this re-mark hold good with reference to the "Mystery of Edwin Drood," as though in some directions there are indications as to the way in which the story would end, in others there was to the way in which the story would end, in others there was a complete enigma as to the writer's purpose. But, says Mr. Proctor, read and re-read the "Mystery," and it will be seen that there is a richness of conception which permeates every page, which has never been surpassed by the great novelist. Assuredly this little pamphlet throws considerable light upon a subject in regard to which there has been too much degree of misconception; and the author of "Other Suns" has shown that it is not merely in the region of science that he can display critical acumen, plain common sense, and a love of in-

Venice! The very name conjures up bright fancies of glorious venice! The very name conjures up bright landles of glorious splendour, magnificent palaces, bright summer mornings, the glow of winter sunsets, the radiance of an exquisite sea, the "wonderful glory of light," the quiet placitude of a city of water! Truly, indeed, has it been said of the Queen of the Ocean that "she shines where she stands." In the glowing words of the authoress whose work is before us, "She is all wooder and enchantment the brightness and clear of decan wonder and enchantment, the brightness and glory of a dream. Her own children cannot enough paint her, praise her, celebrate her splendours, and to outdo, if possible, that patriotic enthusiasm has been the effort of many a stranger from afar."
So Mrs. Oliphant, amongst the rest, enters the lists, but there is an initial difficulty, in so far that Venice, with all her charms, possesses no men of mark. "Where is the poet, where the prophet, the princes, the scholars, the men whom, could we see, we should recognise wherever we meet them, with whom the whole world is acquainted? They are not here." It is strange, it is almost an enigma, but it is true, that for countless ages it has been "Venice for the Venetians." Doges, travellers, soldiers, painters. historians true, that for countless ages it has been "Venice for the Venetians." Doges, travellers, soldiers, painters, historians, each and all merged self into the glorification of their glorious city. There are, of course, exceptions. Titian, to wit, is the common property of mankind at large; but who now talks of the Dandilos, the Orseoli, the Michieli, the Gradenigo, who led the fortunes of the great Republic of Italy? True, the genius of one living Englishman has revived from oblivion the memories of the illustrious traveller, Marco Polo; but who amidst the ordinary public, even with all this advantage in his favour, could proclaim that the immortal wanderer amidst theoases of Central Asia was one of three Polos, all celebrated, but with glory dimmed by the pre-eminence of the greater of the trio—the worthy Marco? the worthy Marco?

Who, too, could write three lines anent the popular hero Pisani, the soldier of fortune Carmagnola, or the warrior whose statue has immortalised his life, the better known Bartolomeo Colleoni? Amidst painters, too, who but the curious even is familiar with the names of the Brothers Bellini, Victor Carpaccio, the limner of St. George, the gay libertine Gingione, or Tintoretto, the young "dyer?" Who but the learned and curious can call to mind the illustrious and gifted Aldus, the greatest printer of his, or, indeed, of any day? These all live, but only, it is feared, in the memories of the few. Mrs. Oliphant's interesting and gifted descriptions of the charms of Venice is an earnest endeavour to remove this mist of ignorance. Venice is an earnest endeavour to remove this mist of ignorance. If exquisite sweetness, picturesque description, absence of prolixity, and elegance of diction can achieve this result, there is no fear for the success of one of the most fascinating works it is often our lot to read.

The Century Magazine for March is unusually good. The article alone on "Salisbury Cathedral" is worth the few pence for which the magazine can be procured. Most apropos, too, is the Essay on "Russian State Prisoners;" and when swaggering democrats and blustering agitators tell us that Ireland gering democrats and blustering agrators tell us that Ireland is at the present moment in a worse plight than the land of the Czar as regards freedom and liberty, the answer might well be, "Have you read the Century Magazine for March, 1888?" "Colonel Rose's Journal at Libby Prison" is the record of the marvellous escapes of a whole batch of prisoners during the American War. It is a romance of the nineteenth century

SIR W. W. HUNTER ON CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

SIR WILLIAM HUNTER'S lecture on "The Religions of India," delivered before the Indian section of the Society of Arts, on Friday last, was a remarkable one in several respects. Lord Northbrook was in the chair, and there were present in the room Lord Ripon, Lord Hobhouse, Sir John Strachey, Sir George Birdwood, Sir Owen Tudor Burne, Sir Juland Danvers, and Sir George Campbell. It may be taken for granted that these gentlemen are not altogether of the same opinion upon religious questions, but their presence at Dr. Hunter's lecture showed that they could appreciate an intellectual treat, and in this they were not disappointed. The same charm of style which characterises all Sir W. Hunter's written works was displayed in his spoken words. Sir William is on the side of the angels, or, rather, on the side of those who are presumed to be only a little lower than the angels-the Christian missionaries in the East. He objects to the results of the spread of Christianity being calculated from an arithmetical point of view only. He considers that to estimate the results of Indian missions by dividing their expenditure among the number of their conversions, and then giving the cost of each new convert at so much ahead, is an error which, sometimes heard on English platforms and reiterated in the Press, "saddens the hearts of thousands of earnest men and women in this country, and carries discouragement to hundreds of devoted workers in distant lands." The lecturer declared that no true ratio existed in India between missionary expenditure or missionary work and the number of new conversions, and he affirms that calculations based on the assumption of such a ratio are absurd. No Judian official is entitled to speak with more authority upon such a point than the author of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," and he showed no hesitation in expressing his opinion. "It has been my duty," he said, "to inquire into the progress of the various religions of India. The inquiry discloses a rapid proportionate increase among the Native Christians, unknown among the Muhammadan and Hindu population; but it also proves that the increase bears no direct relation to the new conversions from orthodox Hinduism and Islam." The three religions move together, but Christianity holds out advantages of social organisation not offered by Hinduism or Islam. "It provides for the education and moral supervision of its people. with a pastoral care which Islam, destitute of a regular priesthood, does not pretend to. It receives the new members into its body with a cordiality and completeness towhich Hinduism is a stranger." No doubt that the missionaries faithfully endeavour to make Christianity this protecting influence to their converts, for by accepting that faith the new converts become almost pariahs in theirown homes, and are not altogether accepted with welcome in the homes or business of English employers of Native labour. The Native Christian servant was not always a "treasure" to his English master or mistress. At least, such used to be the state of things a few years ago; but if there be a change for the better the missionaries are to be congratulated. Dr. Hunter does not agree with "the old Colonel who writes in the newspapers" that every Native Christian servant in India drinks, but he admits that such generalisation has been arrived at by honest, if somewhat careless, observers. In lead, he himself is of opinion that if Christianity is to be an unmixed blessing in India it must be Christianity on the basis of total abstinence. "This self-imposed restriction would in India soon grow into a binding custom, and would raise the Christian communities out of the rank of the liquordrinking castes." Allowing this to be true, it must not be forgotten that the supposed freedom allowed by Christianity is in more than one instance, perhaps, the attraction to the convert. Such converts may be hardly worth the trouble and expense of converting, but the fact of their existence can hardly be questioned. To a respectable Hindu or Muhammadan there would be no self-sacrifice in accepting the condition that in a conversion to Christianity total abstinence must be observed, but it would be difficult to make such respectable.converts understand why English Christians in India should not be enforced teetotallers also. The religion which would permit the Englishman to touch alcohol but insist upon the Native abstaining might be weak in carrying its convictions home. Dr. Hunter is not so strict, however, in the matter of polygamy. If a man has had two wives before conversion it seems to him an inhumanity and an injustice that a change in his personal creed should annul his previous obligations. We are of the same opinion; but what do the missionaries think, and what would Exeter Hall and Mrs. Grundy say, to Christianity permitting a plurality of wives? The whole question of true conversion to Christianity is fraught in India with other difficulties which Dr. Hunter knows, although he did not refer to them. He said sensibly enough that it was out of place for him to speak as the advocate of any creed, but he declared his conviction that English missionary enterprise is the highest expression of the world-wide national life of our race, and that any fallingoff in England's missionary efforts will be a sure sign of swiftly coming national decay. Perhaps so; the question is not to be discussed in these columns any more than on the lecture platform of the Society of Arts, but the changes which have come already over the religious opinions of many intelligent and greatly-to-be-respected English Christians themselves would point to the fact, however saddening it may appear to missionary hearts, that the conversion of India to Christianity is far from becoming a problem of easier solution. But Englishmen in that country may by bright example in their own lives, and by their doings and sayings, help much the good cause which aims at advancing the social and intellectual wants of the people, and of raising Native womanhood to a nobler and happier existence.

We regret that our limited space prevents us from reproducing the eloquent lecture which we have only hastily touched upon, but it will, no doubt, appear in an early number of the Society's journal, and be read extensively not only in missionary circles, but by all Englishmen who are interested in the great question of England's regenerating work in India, for no better exponent of such work could be met with than Sir William Wilson Hunter.

THE Secretary of State for India has appointed Sir Charles Bernard, K.C.S.I., to be Secretary of the Revenue, Statistics, and Commerce Department of the India Office, in succession to Mr. W. G. Pedder, C.S.I., who retires.
